Party Politics

Render therefore unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's, and unto God the things that are God's—Matt. 22 : 21

A sermon delivered by Rev. J. S. I. Wilson in the Methodist church, Flesherton, Sunday, Aug. 23, 1902.

Never was a more subtle snare laid for any man than the pharisees and Herodians devise for the overthrow of Jesus Christ. Politically and religiously they were opposed to each other. The pharisees resented the aggression of the Roman government as subversive of the principles of the great theocracy, while the Herodians were the unwavering champions of the Cæsarean dynasty. But while divided in their general creed they look upon the Messiah as their common foe, and put their hypocritical heads together to plot for his destruction ; and so they come to him with a question, which bids fair to impale the object of their hate on one of the horns of a fatal dilemma. "Is it lawful to give tribute to Cæsar or no?" they ask. If he says "Yes," the pharisees will arraign him on a charge of disloyalty to the fatherland. If he says "No," he will raise the populace to a frenzy of delight, but the Herodians will hale him to a Roman prison. If he declines to answer, he will necessarily relinquish his claim as a moral and religious teacher. They are confident that they have him surrounded by a cordon complete and irrefragible, and like the hounds that have the stag at bay, they wait the opportune moment when they may plunge their fangs in his heart's blood.

But never was a home thrust more adroitly parried. Quietly asking for a penny, he retorts with another question: "Whose image and inscription is this?" They say unto him, "Cæsars." It is Roman money. Cæsar's coin is in their pockets. They trade with it. They grow rich on the traffic they promote with its circulation. They thus tacitly acknowledge the lawful claims of Cæsar upon them. The conclusion is inevitable: "Render unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's, and unto God the things that are God's. If Cæsar has claims upon you, fulfil your obligation. Be true to Cæsar and be true to God. Their implied question was this : "How can we be true to God and pay tribute to Cæsar?" The answer is, "The two allegiances are inseparably bound together. You cannot violate one without doing violence to both." Christ apparently unintentionally, and as if by the merest accident, gives utterance to a tremendous truth—the true citizen of the kingdom of God will be a true citizen of his country. My theme to-night is the use and abuse of party politics—our responsibility as citizens—the call for christian men in the political arena. Let me first of all lay down a few of the principles that underlie all true government :

First—The state is a divine and necessary institution. There are three institutions known to man which are divine in origin, the family, the church and the state. Each aims, or ought to aim, to realize the ideals of the kingdom of God, to translate them into human lives, and fulfil them in human relations. There are some who deny that the church is a divine institution. No less an authority than that great Russian count, Leo Tolstoi, affirms that the state is an unnecessary evil. Others claim that it is a necessary evil, that it is necessary in an evolving and imperfect society, but that, it being evil, must soon or late disappear. Over against these views I think I need only quote the noble words of Burke, in his Reflections on the French Revolution—"Without civil society man could not by any possibility arrive at the perfection of which his nature is capable, nor even make a remote or faint approach to it. . . He who gave our nature to be perfected by our virtue, willed also the necessary means to its perfection. He willed therefore the state—he willed its connection with the source and original archetype of all perfection." Men are not equal in endowment, talent and power. For a long time to come the strong will be under obligation to bear the infirmities of the weak. The state is the medium through which the power of one becomes the good of all. Individual effort may do much for the improvement of other individuals; but individual effort, to be highly successful, must be supported by the social order, it must work through the social order. The state is the only organ or medium through which men can most effectually co-operate in the attainment of social perfection. Anything therefore that approaches anarchy or radical socialism is vicious and dangerous in extreme.

Again—All power comes from God. "There is no power but of God; the powers that be are ordained of God. Whosoever, therefore, resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God." When Jesus was on trial, Pilate became irritated at the refusal of Jesus to answer his question of curiosity, and said, "Speakest thou not unto me? Knowest thou not that I have power to crucify thee and have power to release thee?" The Roman governor spoke of this power as something he might use as caprice might dictate. The answer of Jesus was most significant, and was one of the most suggestive words he ever spoke : "Thou couldest have no power at all against me, except it were given thee from above." The words imply that Pilate's power, which he regarded as arbitrary and irresponsible, power which he was about to misuse so flagrantly, had its source in that mysterious unseen world whence the Son of man had come. Pilate might be a bad man, but the power he exercized was derived from God. He was God's deputy. Is it, then, anything short of sacrilege to give a bad man the exercise of such power?

Once more—The people are the state. We have one of the most democratic forms of government in the world. In Canada the citizen is supreme. Louis XIV. said, "I am the state." What that great monarch said in his pride every citizen of our fair land may say in his humility. Lord Brougham once said, "In England the queen is in place, the House of Commons is in power." The authority is vested in the people. King Edward sits on a throne, wears a crown and is enthroned in the affections of millions of loyal subjects, but he does not rule, he never will rule one hour. The people rule. The will of the people is supreme. But with power comes responsibility. If there are bad men in office, if there are flagrant iniquities that ought to be abolished, if things are not as they ought to be, there is a remedy. There is a weapon mightier than clashing steel and roaring artillery. It is that silent yet colossal weapon called the ballot—

"——a weapon firmer set
And better than the bayonet,
A weapon that comes down as still
As snowflakes fall upon the sod;
Yet executes a freeman's will
As lightning does the will of God."

The responsibility that rests on every man who is possessed of the exercise of the franchise is unevadable.

Now, christian citizenship, or the new citizenship as it is sometimes called, maintains the supreme right of Jesus Christ to rule municipal, state and national life. These should be governed on principles laid down by him. Upon the application of these principles depends the final solution of every present day problem. It believes our government to be appointed by God and therefore sacred—too sacred to be left in the hands of corrupt men, whatever the party name. It believes that the dangers which threaten our country arise less from the strength and activity of bad men than from the apathy and cowardice of good men. It believes that christian men are called upon to put their loyalty to Jesus Christ into their politics and to vote as he would have them vote. It believes that the office of a lawmaker or administrator is so sacred, that to put a bad man into it is sacrilege. The time has passed when a man can be a good christian and a bad citizen.

The true citizen must be imbued with patriotism. We have a country of which we may well be proud, "full of nimble little rivers which gladly turn the turbines of mills before they run weary to the sea, and of majestic lakes that float the commerce of nations. Its soil so fertile that, as Douglas Jerrold said of Australia, 'you have but to tickle it with a hoe and it laughs with a harvest,' its bowels rich in every conceivable kind of mineral wealth, awaiting but the 'open sesame' to disclose boundless riches beyond the Arabian Nights.'" Its wide area unified by railroads and telegraph wires which annihilate distance and make Halifax and Vancouver next door neighbors. Best of all it is a land in which religion, education and philanthropy are deeply rooted and flourishing. "Such a country! Such an arena! Shall not its citizens be as pure as the breezes, as lofty as the mountains, and as firm for righteousness as the granite which underlies this continent?"

The true patriot is not the one who says, "My country is all right, my country is without a flaw," but who truly estimates her imperfections and sets about righting them ; who measures the strength of the enemies that threaten her greatness, and plots for their overthrow. He is not a friend of his country who winks at the evil that is in it. This sentiment has been well expressed by Samuel Washburn, Jr. :

My country right or wrong—
If right keep her so,
If wrong, right her.
Brothers strong in faith
That the right will come right.
Never tremble at death;
Never think of thyself 'mid the roar of the fight.
Hark to the battle cry
Sounding from yonder sky.
Grasp the sword of the Lord
And forward!"

Then we want an intelligent patriotism. DeTocqueville said in his marvellous treatise on "Democracy in America," "The ballot box and the jury box are the normal school of America. Democracy is the best form of government in the world, but it is fraught with its dangers. Too many people are actuated in the exercise of their franchise by heredity and sentiment. How many young men are voting Conservative or Reform who know no other reason for doing so than that their fathers and grandfathers voted that way? The man who has not taken the trouble to become versed in the great questions of the day, and who is influenced solely by sentiment or heredity, is certainly not qualified to share in the government of his country.

Another danger lies in the lamentable fact that some men are on the market—they are for sale to the highest bidder. There are the men who will debauch their franchise and degrade their manhood for a glass of whiskey. If there is one man on a lower moral level than another it is the man who can be bribed, who will prostitute his sacred privileges of citizenship. There is only one man that I would place lower than he, and that is the wretch who bribes him, who goes through the country corrupting his fellow men, and controverting the expressed will of an intelligent electorate.

Moreover we want an intelligent patriotism unshackled by party allegiance. Now I am not going to decry the principle of party government. Properly safeguarded it is probably the best system. A good healthy opposition is a much-needed check on any government. But you know and I know that party politics to day are utterly corrupt. It would be arrant falsehood to say that there are no good men in the political arena. There are scores of true, honest men, men who could not be bribed to do a shabby thing, men who, however loyal they might be to party when party is in the right, would
