A COLUMN OF STORIES.

FUNNY THINGS THAT ARE NOTED IN THE PAPERS.

Two Yarns About an Artist—The History Cousin Jack Told His Cousin Edith—The Talents of a Youth on a Newspaper—Gone Into the Sleeves.

A well-known American artist was last summer sketching in the galleries of the Louvre in Paris. Being at work he had, of course, something the appearance of being a habitue of the place, and as such he was several times addressed by the visitors.

A lady one day haughtily said to the artist:

"Will you be so kind as to direct me to the statue of Catherine de Medici?"

"The statue of Catherine de Medici?" he repeated in some perplexity. "I don't remember such a statue."

The smile of the visitor was more superior than ever as she replied:

"Oh, it is one of the best known statues here. I supposed that any artist would know where it is to be found."

There was so much scorn in her accent as she pronounced the word "artist" that the gentleman was at once amused and annoyed.

"I am an artist," he said, "but I cannot help you, unless it might be that you have made a mistake, and it is the Venus de Medici you are looking for."

The expression which came over the face of the superior questioner was both ludicrous and self-betraying.

"Why," she stammered, "it was the Venus de Medici that I wanted, of course. Do you know where that is?"

"Oh, yes," he answered, smiling. "Any artist can tell you that!"

On another occasion he was approached by a couple of ladies, one of whom asked:

"Can you tell us where to find the statue of Cupid, and——"

She paused, in the evident hope that he would help her out, but he had heard the name Psyche pronounced in so many ways that he was curious to see what would be made out of it now. The visitor, finding that he would not pronounce the name, turned appealing to her companion, and the other lady said with much briskness:

"Why, of course you know; the famous statute of Cupid—and the person who is with him."

Of course all our readers know that "Psyche" is pronounced as if spelled "Sikey," with the "i" long, as in "like."

All Unnerved.

He didn't have them again, that was evident, but when he came in at 6 o'clock from his office he was badly rattled.

"What's the matter?" asked his wife.

"I—I saw a woman a while ago," he stammered nervously, "wearing one of those confounded skoop hirts——"

"Skoop hirts?" queried the lady, eyeing him closely.

"No—no," shaking his head, "one of those confounded hook spirts——"

"Hook spirts?" and again his wife looked at him suspiciously.

"No, one of those confounded skook pirts——"

"Skook pirts?" interrupted his wife.

He rubbed his head hard and tried again.

"One of those confounded soop——"

"Henry, my dear," interrupted Mrs. Henry, getting up and taking him by the arm, "suppose you go out and soak your wits at the hydrant for a few moments."

Henry obeyed, and when he returned he said it was one of those confounded hoop skirts that had unnerved him so.

Jack, How Could You?

Miss Dearborn (governess to Edith)—Now, Edith, you know that our great fair commemorates the discovery of this country by Columbus; therefore I am very particular that you should pay great attention to your history lesson.

Edith (aged ten)—Oh, I have it perfectly. Cousin Jack read it to me last evening and made me repeat it over and over to him until I learned it by heart.

Miss Dearborn (with secret admiration for Cousin Jack)—How very kind he is to you! Well, then, when Columbus conceived the idea of starting upon a voyage of discovery what did he do?

Edith—When Columbus conceived the idea of starting upon a voyage of discovery he said to himself, 'What a dead cinch I will have if I can induce Isabella to hock her jewels and—and—to hock her jewels and—oh, yes—to hock her jewels and blow in the beodle on a dandy outfit?' So he——"

Governess faints with disenchantment.

Turning His Talents to Use.

"Mr. Freshman," said the editor-in-chief, "do you make a specialty of any particular branch of editorial writing?"

"Yes, sir," answered the new man on the staff, eagerly. "I have given special attention and much thought to the treatment of palæontological subjects, historical criticism, and comparative philology."

"H'm! You surprise me, Mr. Freshman," rejoined the editor. "You may turn in, if you please, a half column or so on the necessity of raising less cotton and more hogs down South."

Give It Up!

A voluble lady sitting in her deck-chair and undergoing the premonitory qualms of mal-de-mer, remarks to the unhappy group about her:

"If I get sea-sick like the rest of these people, I shall just give up my reason altogether, so I shall.

Whereupon a bluff old party awakens from his stupor long enough to retort spitefully:

"Judging from my own experience, you will give up for more than that, madame!"

It's Business.

Father—Mary, I want you to be careful and see that that boy of ours doesn't read any of that dime novel trash with which the news-stands are filled. Stories of train robberies and so forth are demoralizing—ha! this is good!

Mother—What is good?

F.—The paper this morning says that our syndicate has effected a corner in coal. That will send the price away up and—

M.—But, wont that be hard on the poor?

F.—Poor! Stuff! It's business.

Accommodating.

Mr. Coupon—Consider again, Miss de Vere, it's true I am rather old, but on the other hand, I have no family and am very rich.

Miss de Vere—No, Mr. Coupon, I can never be your wife, but I would be pleased to be an adopted daughter to you.—Texas Siftings.

Where It Went.

Mrs. Kerstyle—I gave you more material to make this dress than I ever used in a garment before, and the skirt is hardly full enough to fit a churn. How does that happen?

Dressmaker (shrugging her shoulders)—Madame insisted on having ze sleeves in ze height of ze fashong.

Lack of Proper Appliances.

Chicago Man (in Omaha)—This water of yours is simply horrible. Why don't you boil it before using it?

Omaha Man—Because our tea-kettles have no mud-valve attachments.

Centennial And Jubilee.

On 1st April, 1793, the deed for the present Tyendinaga reserve was signed at Niagara by John Graves Simcoe, the pioneer governor of Upper Canada. The Mohawks propose celebrating the centennial during May, combining the celebration with that of the fiftieth anniversary of the laying of the corner stone of Christ church, done on the 30th of May, 1843, by Samuel Peter Jarvis, then chief superintendent of Indian affairs in Canada.

The Bull Fight in Madrid.

As rivulets and mountain torrents rush to the main stream of some mighty watercourse, the whole population of Madrid flocks to the Alcala, laying aside, as they settle themselves down in the tiers of seats in the circus, the gravity for which the Castillians are noted elsewhere, to give themselves up, as the spectacle begins, to noisy and boisterous delight. Above are the gayly decorated private boxes, in which sway to and fro the white cloaks and red fans of the richly dressed occupants, whilst below are the masses of citizens, who, though generally sober enough, are now intoxicated, so to speak, with the smell of blood and the sight of the alguazils, or police, in their old-fashioned costumes; the chulos, or foot attendants, in their many colored capas de durancillo, or silk cloaks; the picadores, or mounted spearmen; the banderilleros or dart-throwers; the espadas, or slayers; and the mule team, or el tiro. The spectators gloat on the skill with which the picadores fling their spears, and the banderilleros their darts; the agile suertes, or tricks of the chulos and toreros as they goad the bull to madness; and the excitement and tension are immense in the final act of the drama, when death is dealt by the espada to the bull, who has strewn the arena with the corpses of horses. Then, no doubt, the people of Madrid lose their heads; their self control is gone, and they really seem cruel and inhuman.

For all this, however, he who condemns them does them an injustice, for there are no better-hearted folk in the world than these same people of Madrid. Set against their conduct at the bull fights their behavior in times of revolution or when some epidemic is raging, and no one can help admiring as I admire them and loving as I love them. Never can I forget their noble charity during the visitation of cholera in 1865, when I saw poor work-people carrying the stricken in their arms, pressing to their hearts those all but dead, reviving them with their own breath, never thinking that in so doing they were risking their own lives. Truly a people who could act in a manner so heroic, so sublime, must have a grand reserve of vital force, a generous nature which radiates forth goodness as sun radiates forth heat.—Harper's Week

Mamma's Kisses.

A kiss when I wake in the morning
A kiss when I go to bed,
A kiss when I burn my fingers,
A kiss when I bump my head.
A kiss when my bath is over,
A kiss when my bath begins,
My mamma is full of kisses—
As full as a nurse of pins.
A kiss when I play with my rattle,
A kiss when I pull her hair;
She covered me over with kisses
The day I fell from the stair.
A kiss when I give her trouble,
A kiss when I gave her joy;
There's nothing like mamma's kisses
To her own little baby boy.

Seafaring Pigeons.

On the old Constellation we had a number of pigeons, four or five pairs of different colored plumage. The birds were great favorites, and grew very tame during our long passages at sea. They had a comfortable house made for them by the ship's carpenter, but they preferred one of our boats, a large, roomy cutter, hanging at davits abreast the quarter-deck, where the officers used to take their after-dinner smoke. In the stern-sheets of the cutter the pigeons had made nests, securing for that purpose odds and ends lying about the decks, such as rope yarns, bits of cloth, and broom straws that we would throw down for them to gather up. As the strawa fell on deck, the birds would fly down from the gunwale of the boat, seize the pieces in their beaks, and fly back. Each pair was building a nest, and it was interesting to watch them work together. The most energetic seemed to be a purple hen, whose flights to the deck from the boat were most frequent. Nevertheless she kept good watch over her mate, and saw that he did his share of the work.

One evening, as this daily nest-building was going on, the purple hen, who had just carried a straw to the boat, hopped up on the gunwale, preparatory to flying down for another. While there, her mate was on deck picking a choosing from a number of straws that had been thrown down for him. Close to him was a white hen pigeon whose mate was in the boat. The two interchanged, perhaps, some bird remarks or glances, not perceptible, however, to the officers who were standing about. The keen glance of the purple hen, on the contrary, saw indications of a flirtation in the actions of the two birds, and ruffling up her feathers and puffing herself out to her fullest extent, she swooped down from her perch to the deck. Walking up to the pair with an air that showed unmistakable indignation and wrath, she strutted around her mate, looking him squarely in the eye, and dealt him three sharp blows with her beak in quick succession. The blows fell squarly on the head of the bird, who staggered for a few seconds and then fell over dead, an undoubted victim to the jealous rage of his consort.

Women Dentists.

Among the notable gatherings that will assemble at Chicago this year will be a meeting of the Woman's Dental Association of the United States. This association was organized a year ago by the women dentists of Philadelphia, and now includes members in all the large cities of the country. The number of women practising dentistry in the United States is about 200, most of whom have entered the profession within the last ten years. Their success in this line of work has been so marked that it is not improbable that another decade will see their example followed by large numbers of their sex.

Learning the Phonograph.

A few young women employed as typewriters have found it profitable to learn the mystery of the phonograph, as it is slowly making its way in the business world. The delicacy of its mechanism makes it a peculiarly fit instrument for the deft hands of women. So small is the thread carried by the spindle of the phonograph that the process of threading requires the aid of a mechanical device.

The Population of Kingston.

Is about 18,000, and we would say at least one-half are troubled with some affection of the throat and lungs, as those complaints are, according to statistics, more numerous than others. We would advise all our readers not to neglect the opportunity to call on their druggists and get a cottle of Kemp's Balsam for the throat and lungs. Trial size free. Large bottle 50c and $1. Sold by all druggists.

Liquor Case And Gambling.

Inspector Connolly had Alexander Young, Sand Point hotel keeper, before Magistrate Eady, on Saturday, on two charges. One was for selling liquor during prohibited hours. Though six or seven witnesses were called, they failed to prove the charge. The next charge was for allowing gambling on the premises contrary to law. In this case it was proved that some parties threw dice in the hotel; this being a breach in the law, a fine of $10 and costs was imposed.

Don't forget the name of the great lung medicine, the only medicine that can show a clear record of its efficacy from the mouths of the patients who have used it—"Salvator Magnus."

On April 5th an interesting event occurred at the residence of W. Brandon, Richmond. His daughter, Annie, was married to George Hambly. The bride was supported by Miss Ella M. Brandon, Napanee, and the groom by Frank Dryden. The bride received many valuable presents.

At the regular meeting of the young people's association of the Western Methodist church, Napanee, these officers were elected: Honorary president, Rev. J. J. Rae; president, H. E. Asselstine; vice-president, Miss Maud Garrison; secretary, J. Fred Tilley; treasurer, Miss Lucy Anderson.

If there ever was a specific for anyone complaint, then Carter's Little Liver Pills are a specific for sick headache, and every woman should know this. One pill a dose. Try them.

On the Tyendinaga reserve W. P. Green was appointed rector's warden for Christ church, and Francis Claus for All Saints'. Wm. I. Brant was elected warden for the parish church and Dow Claus for All Saints'. Chief Solomon Loft was re-elected lay delegate to the diocesan synod for the ensuing three years.

For those who are suffering from piles there is nothing equal to "Magic Pile Lotion" for promptness of action, certainty of cure, cleanliness, comfort and simplicity of application. 50c per bottle, all druggists.

In St. John's Church, Perth, Miss K. Bennett was united in matrimony to P. Byrnes, Burgess. The bride was gracefully assisted by Miss M. Bennett, Lavant, while the groom was ably supported by J. P. Byrne, Perth. The bride and bridesmaid were neatly attired in suits of fawn trimmed with silk and lace of the same shade.

More cases of sick headache, biliousness, constipation, can be cured in less time, with less medicine, and for less money, by using Carter's Little Liver Pills, than by any other means.

On Saturday death removed a familiar figure from Almonte in the person of William Moran, ill since January. His disease was caused by a breaking-up of the system. Deceased was born in Ireland in 1833. He immigrated to Canada in 1856. He taught school in Kitley, and was local school teacher there for some time and was postmaster at Newbliss for a time. He was a resident of Almonte for twenty years.

Inverary Items.

INVERARY, April 17.—The calamitous fire which occurred at Battersea a few days ago has deprived a large section of the country of the advantage of a grist mill. A movement is made to form a syndicate to erect a good grist mill at Inverary. We understand that a liberal bonus will be given by the people in the immediate vicinity in aid of the building of a good mill in the village. The erection of a mill here would have many advantages, being in the centre of a good farming part of the country, and would be convenient for many in the adjacent townships of Kingston and Loughboro. Several prominent farmers are moving in the matter, and opened up a correspondence with several practical men touching the enterprise. The enterprise has taken hold of some men in a manner that is likely to ensure success. One person in particular has written a member of the cabinet at Ottawa touching certain water privileges. We sincerely hope the syndicate will see their way clearly to erect the mill, as it would be a paying investment.

A Thankful Man.

No one has better reason to be grateful for Membray's kidney and liver cure than I have. I was ill for a long time under the doctor's care. I was tortured with muscular rheumatism, disordered kidneys and general debility. I was losing flesh rapidly had gone down from 180 to 130 pounds, and was bedfast for months. If you have been there before you know how little there was in life for me, and when I was asked to try Membray's cure, how hopeless I was. I used two bottles only ($2,) and at the end of that time had risen from a sick bed, regained my appetite, was relieved from all pain, put on new flesh, and am now attending to business as well as ever. Write me if you want further particulars about Membray's kidney and liver cure. D. Waters, merchant, Camphellford.

Spot and Pansy.

It is well known that all the simpler emotions of the human heart, such as love and hate, joy and sorrow, good nature and anger, are common to many of the lower animals, and that they are most plainly apparent in those that for a long series of generations have been admitted to the domestic companionship of human friends. Those who read the following short tale of Pansy's misfortune and Spot's contrition and grief, which was lately told in the New York Evening sun, will surely admit that Spot deserved sympathy rather than censure:

"The wife of a government official in Quebec had a spaniel named Spot and a kitten whose flowerlike face gave her the name of Pansy. The two were great friends. Spot would take Pansy's head in his mouth, and gently roll her to and fro. One Sunday morning the two were at play. The dog was in high spirits and too rough, for, alas! when he let go of the kitten she did not scamper away as usual. The dog capered about her, running backward and forward, to entice her to play; but the kitten did not move. Then he turned her over with his nose, teased her with his paw; still she did not move. Spot then showed signs of great uneasiness. He would pause, then begin again, and coax her to get up. At length he seemed to realize that Pansy would never get up any more, and that he knew the meaning of death. With every evidence of distress he carried her to the side of the walk. Then he dug a hole, put the kitten in it, and carefully covered it with earth, and went away.

"When the family came home from church they were surprised not to be met as usual by the dog and cat. A member of the family called from the window; where he had been watching the sad incident, 'Call Spot.' The dog was called, and came creeping on all fours to his master's feet, where he lay, a spectacle of grief and quiet. 'Ask for Pansy,' prompted the witness. The question was asked, and the dog looked up in mute appeal. The group moved down the walk to the newly-made grave, but the dog refused to follow, and crawled abjectedly away. A few moves with a cane revealed the kitten's body. Spot was again called. He came dragging himself along, and lay groveling at his master's feet. No one could doubt the dog's anguish. It was not so much their duty to blame as to console him in his grief."

A Can of Monkeys.

A Bangor family recently engaged a cook, who was quite an artist with the kitchen utensils and the raw material at her disposal, although she was not on good terms with the cook books, being unable to read. She identified canned goods, for instance, by the pictures on the can labels, but once, at least, this did not work and the result was amusing. A can of desiccated cocoanut was brought to the house by the groceryman and it bore the well-known trade mark cut of the monkey dallying with a cocoanut. When her gaze fell upon that can she was astounded. "Oh, lor!" she ejeculated. "I have seen canned corn, canned peaches and most everything canned, but bless me if this ain't the first time I ever saw any canned monkeys!"—Lewiston (Me.) Journal.

Koch's Lymph a Success in Certain Cases.

"I have for two years been making a series of experiments with Koch's tuberculine," Sanitary Councillor Thorner has declared to the Medical Society of Berlin. "Used with judgment, the lymph has proved to be one of the most efficacious remedies I have ever used in cases of consumption. I have not known a single patient in all my practice who has not escaped many serious features of the disease. I warn you, however, against indiscriminate use of the lymphal, as, like other remedies, it is curative only in certain forms and stages of tuberculosis. My usual dose for a patient just beginning treatment is one-twentieth of a milligramme."

A Chafing Dish.

The chafing dish should be as much a part of the family life as is the tea tray. That is, of course, in those families where the chief object is to keep the lords of creation comfortable and happy, and consequently the mental sunshine undimmed. Many a man who did not want any breakfast, or who was out of sorts with his dinner, will fix himself up a savory mess in this convenient article and be happy again. A good chafing dish can be bought for $3, or a very admirable substitute, little alcohol lamp, at 75 cents, with an agate-ware pan set over it. One of these will look very cosy opposite a smoking urn or coffee pot on the breakfast table.

A Colorado Heroine.

A Colorado girl named Amy Leslie has won renown. She was crossing one of the mountain ranges in the southern part of the state when she came across a party of gentlemen who had been caught in the snowdrift. But for her prompt assistance they would all have perished. One of the party was a young man from Massachusetts, and the customary ending of romantic rescues is already talked of.
