One side of the question often overlooked in highway improvements is the increased value of land, says the Burk's Falls Arrow. Many farmers regard with distrust and disfavor measures for highway improvements, and are likely to oppose efforts for the betterment of our roads unless they can first be convinced that good roads will be a paying financial investment. Will it pay the farmers in dollars and cents to improve their public roads? A consensus of opinion from sixty of the most intelligent farmers in the centre and northern parts of New York state gives the average estimated increase in the selling price of land, due to improved highways as $6.48 an acre, and the estimated average annual loss a 100 acres from poor roads as $76.28. The estimate may be too high for our district. Can any sane man doubt the wisdom of exchanging the losses, delays, accidents, and vexations of spirit occasioned by bad roads, for the comfort and other advantages of good roads, when the cost is the same, when he might be delivered from the thaldrom of mud roads and may have option of selling his farm at a rate that will more than reimburse him for the expense.
