SOME ODD STORIES.

INTERESTING INCIDENTS RELATED BY MAJOR ALFRED R. CALHOUN.

How Marie Ziegenfuss Convinced Henry Bolts of Her Love, and How He Was Startled When He Was Enlightened as to Her Delicate Appetite.

[Copyright, 1892, by American Press Association.]

The Pennsylvania Dutch farmers are famed for their thrift, their good tables, their piety and their buxom daughters. John Ziegenfuss was a man of this class, and his only daughter, Marie, would have been the toast of all the young men in that part of Berks county if they had been addicted to anything so wicked and expensive as drinking toasts.

Despite her many attractions, prospective and actual, Marie Ziegenfuss was not a coquette; she did not know the meaning of the word, and it is doubtful if she had ever heard it. From among her host of admirers she selected Henry Boltz, the son of another well to do farmer who lived up near the Lebanon line, about six miles away.

As soon as it became known that Mr. Boltz was the accepted suitor the others stood aloof, perhaps because there was nothing else to do. Every Sunday Henry Boltz drove to the meeting house where Marie and her parents attended, and after the services were over he placed his sweetheart in the buggy, triumphantly drove her home and invariably remained to dinner.

Under these delightful circumstances Henry Boltz ought to have been entirely happy; but, alas for the vanity of human wishes, he was not, and this is the reason:

Apart from more worldly considerations the mildly ardent young man loved Marie Ziegenfuss because she was large, stout, healthful, rosy and entirely hugable—if one may be permitted to coin an essentially descriptive word. And then the fact that Marie loved him with all the love of which she was capable, gave an added impulse to his passion.

But here was the truth; this is what so sorely perplexed him:

He had heard, but his own experience did not warrant the belief, that people who are in love either do not or cannot eat as much as those who are entirely free from the tender passion. Every Sunday he sat beside Marie at dinner, and this afforded him an excellent opportunity to judge of her appetite. To his inexpressible amazement she had not the appetite of a moulting canary.

She ate as near next to nothing as one well could that pretended to eat at all. Why, she would even cut a green pea in two, when those delicious legumes were in season, and with touching delicacy would convey, on the point of her knife, one half at a time to her lips.

After dinner the young folks would go into the parlor, the walls of which were decorated with framed "samples," done in Berlin wool by the fair Marie, and they would sit, one at either end of the high backed, horsehair covered sofa, and look yearningly at each other, while Henry, with his own hearty meal still fresh in his mind, would sigh:

"Ah, Maree, don'd you dinks you vos already in lofe? You eat so pooty mooch noddings like a leedle bushberfly."

Henry remained usually with his dulcinea till hour supper time, when he would hitch up and go home.

One Sunday afternoon there came on a fierce storm, and as the rain kept persistently up till long after dark, Mr. Ziegenfuss and his wife, backed by the pleadings of the gentle Marie, prevailed on the young man to remain for the night.

The houses of the Pennsylvania Dutch farmers, though usually comfortable, are rarely so costly as their barns. This night the clergyman and his wife were also guests, and Henry Boltz was given a bed in a sort of loft directly over the kitchen.

This was a night of unusual dissipation for the young people. They actually staid up courting, or rather looking at each other from opposite ends of the sofa, till the high clock, standing like a coffin in the dimmest corner of the room, struck ten.

Henry looked as if he was going to kiss Marie, but he compromised by chucking her under the chin, then, startled at his own audacity, he hurried up to the loft and lay down to pleasant dreams.

He was awakened, not by the swish of the willow branches against the dormer window or the steady beating of the rain on the roof, but by a delicious odor and the occasional rattle of dishes beneath. He rubbed his eyes and the golden lines of light between the boards assured him that there was some one at work in the kitchen.

He got noiselessly up and looked down through a crack, and he gasped, "Lieber Herr, dot vos mein Maree!"

Henry Boltz was right. It was Marie in working dress, with a big blue apron on, and her ample arms bared to the shoulder. She had just fried a huge plate of ham and was in the act of breaking a dozen eggs into the sizzling gravy when her lover beheld her.

He believed that a lot of starved giants had been driven for refuge from the storm to farmer Ziegenfuss', and that Marie, noble girl that she was, was robbing herself of sleep in order to appease their hunger.

As soon as Marie had broken a dozen eggs into the pan she took up the candle and a pitcher that held about six quarts, and lifting a trap in the kitchen floor she descended to the cellar.

Henry Boltz was not a humorist, and his few jokes were of a practical kind. The instant Marie disappeared he skipped down stairs in light marching order, broke another dozen eggs into the pan, then skipped back again, and gluing his eyes to a crack he chuckled:

"As den eggs vos not mine dot vos a pooty good shoke on Marie."

Marie soon reappeared, but to Henry Boltz's horror, instead of setting the table for six at least, she set up for one. She piled the eggs on one dish without noticing the increase, then she poured out a mug of cider, placed a large dish of bread within easy reach, and began to eat in a way that dazed the watcher till his head began to swim.

At first he had a dim notion that she doubted his love, and had hit upon this plan of committing suicide, but her sighs of delight ex cider, bread, eggs and ham disappeared soon convinced him that his suspicions were on the wrong track.

"Gott in Himmel!" he groaned, as Marie finished the first dozen eggs and began energetically on the second, "is dot de girl dot dou'd can swallow a pea bud ven it vos shopped in two?"

At length Marie pushed back her chair. The ham, bread and cider were gone, and only one egg remained. Then pressing her red hands midway of her apron, the gentle Marie sighed:

"Ach; listen Heinrich, dot vas doo drue. I pean in lofe, oh, so mooch. Vince I could eat twelf eggs, bud now I can only eleven get away mit. "Oh, lofe! Oh, lofe!"

And Heinrich groaned, "Mien Gott!"

A Shrewd Sentinel.

This story of Frederick the Great was told me by a young soldier in Berlin, who touched for its accuracy, and I can find no good reason for doubting his word, now that I am in America—I know it would have been positively dangerous to have done so in his presence.

The kingdom was at length at peace, and Frederick selected to guard the palace at Potsdam a lot of his oldest and most faithful veterans. These men soon learned that the same vigilance was not needed about the palace that was required in the presence of the enemy, so they gradually fell into the comfortable habit of snoozing in their sentry boxes.

This delinquency was reported to the king, but instead of showing anger he determined to play a practical joke on the sleeping veterans and at the same time find an opportunity to read them a lecture.

It had been his custom to present to each of the veterans at Christmas a purse containing twenty pieces of gold, so he set Christmas eve for the night when he should visit the posts about the palace, where there were always twelve men on guard.

He made the rounds at midnight and found every man asleep in his box, then he returned to the palace and came back with the twelve purses. Carefully he tied one to each soldier's musket and then went to bed to await developments.

Now, it so chanced that one of the soldiers, who had been asleep when Frederick made his first tour of inspection, woke up in the meantime, and recognizing the king by the light of a lamp, and seeing him fastening something to the arms of the somnolent guards, he determined to remain quiet.

Without a word the king treated him as he had the others, and as soon as he was gone the veteran felt the purse and counted the money. Then he reasoned after this fashion:

"My comrades are all asleep, and as they can know nothing about the king's gift, why, it stands to reason that they will never miss it."

Acting on this hint the old soldier visited all his comrades, relieved them of their purses, then went back to his box and slept in earnest till he was relieved.

The next morning the king summoned the twelve sleepers before him, told them that he had visited them at their posts the night before and asked them to tell their dreams.

With confusion eleven of them confessed that they had been asleep, but had dreamed nothing. The twelfth man then approached, and with a profound bow to the king, said:

"Sire, I dreamed that a person, who very much resembled your majesty, visited us last night, and, finding us all asleep, withdrew, but soon came back with a lot of purses which he thoughtfully fastened to the musket of each. Then I dreamed that I was in dread lest some one not so honest as myself might chance along and rob my comrades, whereon, still dreaming, I went out and gathered in all the money, nor felt overweighted with the burden."

From this Frederick inferred that the old fellow had not been asleep at all. So, after the manner of kings, who have lots of money without work, he told the veteran to keep all the purses, and he deferred his usual presents to the others till the next year.

It was evidently the purpose of the honest sentinel to keep all the purses if Frederick had not asked for an explanation; all of which goes to prove that dishonesty is sometimes the most paying policy.

At Stone River.

In the battle of Stone River, while our men were waiting dismounted in a jungle of scrub oaks and dwarf cedars, from which we expected the enemy every moment, a brace of wild turkeys, so paralyzed with fright that they were incapable of flying, ran down between the contending lines, but much as they were desired not a shot was fired at the poor creatures.

On this part of the field we were so close to the enemy that we could hear them talking, and the clicking of the rifle hammers as they were raised to put on caps were distinctly audible. Of course this was only during a brief cessation in the storm of death.

Once more the battle tide swept down to the jungle, and the birds rose up and flew about as if bewildered.

Again the storm lulled, and we heard a yell and a laugh coming from the direction of the men in gray.

The cause of this out of place merriment was soon evident to the men in blue, who saw a rabbit with its bit of a white tail turned over its back fairly flying south between the lines.

While bunny was still in sight a stentorian voice called out from the Confederate side:

"Go it, cottontail! If it wasn't for my doggone pride I'd be keepin you comp'ny!"

And as he had expressed the feelings of more than one man on either side, a shout of approving laughter went up that for the moment drowned out the ceaseless roar of the battle.

TURNING UP WEALTH.

The Minerals That Are Being Developed in the Back Country.

Plevna, May 30.—Miners are busy at Matheson's mica mine, Grindstone lake, and a good quality of the mineral taken out thus far. An accurate assay has been made of the galena found in Barrie, showing it to be the richest in Eastern Ontario, the specimen tried rating 138 oz. silver to the ton. The celebrated Meyer's cave is said to be the origin of this vein. Many people think the reports of such wealth in this cave to be fallacious; an interview with some of our prospectors might convince them of its correctness. Before the Indians abandoned their old trapping ground in the vicinity of Sneconer lake, Miller township, they found lead in sufficient quantities to cast bullets for their firearms. Iron is found in the same district in large quantities. Michael Weber has extended the lease of his gold mine for two months. Gold has been washed from quartz procured at this place. To those who have had faith in the mineral treasures of this district for so many years, the discoveries now made must be regarded as very encouraging, considering how little is known as to the manner in which metals occur in this region and the comparatively small amount of intelligent exploration which has yet been done. There is certainly inducement for more capital and enterprise in this direction.

A number of deer have been seen in the neighborhood, notwithstanding our defective game laws, which have allowed this beautiful animal to be hounded out of the country. Any intelligent person interested in the protection of game, desires that killing deer with dogs should be strictly prohibited in this locality. Council met last Saturday. M. Holden has a hen's egg 8½ inches in circumference, and challenges any hen to beat it. Miss Dawson is preparing for high school entrance examination. Mr. Dawson, M.P., home for a few days, returned to Ottawa this morning. Mr. Ruttan, Sydenham, looking after his property in Miller, returns home to-day. James Stalker lost a valuable cow last week.

Will you heed the warning. The signal perhaps of the sure approach of that more terrible disease Consumption. Ask yourselves if you can afford for the sake of saving 50c., to run the risk and do nothing for it. We know from experience that Shiloh's Cure will cure your cough. It never fails.

Westport, May 30.—Mrs. Allen Moore died on the 24th, aged about eighty years. She was an old resident of this place and highly respected. Her funeral was largely attended. Mrs. Fred Bower, Rochester, visiting her relatives here, returned home on the 27th. Miss Rose Trey has gone to Rochester on a visit. Arthur Mavell has gone to Michigan. J. H. Whalen has commenced to build another brick house on Whalen street. R. Polk is building an addition to his dwelling. Mr. Twohey, Lindsay, visiting his son, Rev. Father Twohey, returned home to-day. Miss Mary Bennett, Perth, is visiting friends here. D. P. Alguire shipped a large number of cheese last week. Uncle Tom's Cabin company had a full house here last night.

Seeley's Bay Sayings.

Seeley's Bay, May 31.—The funeral of the late Mrs. Walter Carly took place on Monday. The remains were taken to St. John's church, Leeds, for interment. John Barney has taken the contract for building the vault for Messrs. Gilbert and Johnson. The job is progressing favorably. Abraham Young and wife are visiting friends in Glegburnie. In the absence of the Rev. Mr. Reynolds, Joel Dorman filled the pulpit in the Methodist church on Sunday evening. Mr. Dorman's discourse did him great credit as a new beginner. Boating is very fine in the canal at present. Some miscreants are smashing the windows in Mrs. Palmer's house. They should be prosecuted. Arthur Likely has extended the pump business considerably.

Central Park Lawn Grass.

Our lawn grass is good. No coarse stalks to be found after planting a few weeks; it is fresh; it will give satisfaction, at Wilson's Pharmacy.

Parham Paragraphs.

Parham, May 31.—Mr. Black's store is in full blast. The hotel, once occupied and carried on by Mr. Swarbrick, is now carried on as a temperance house by Mr. Granger, who has moved here. The annual picnic of St. James' church will be held in Geo. Hewes' grove, on Thursday, June 23rd. Posters with necessary information will be out in a few days. David Goodfellow is suffering from an attack of measles. Our mail carrier, to and from the station, has a much more settled air about him. He is not the only one about here suffering from that species of grippe.

Do You Like Flowers?

Call at Wilson's Pharmacy and get a few gladioli bulbs. Dahlias on order. These bulbs can be relied on. A full stock of flower seeds constantly on hand.

These pipes are now used by the corporations of the principal Canadian cities, including Montreal, Toronto, Quebec and London. Read what Toronto says about them.

CITY ENGINEER'S DEPARTMENT, TORONTO, Feb. 25th, 1892.

W. C. Trotter, Esq. President Standard Drain Pipe Co., St. John's:

Dear Sir.—The City Council having awarded the contract for sewer pipes for 1892 to your company, I have much pleasure in writing you to say that, from inspection I have made of the pipes we have already used, and also of several hundred feet of which you have delivered in our yards for future use, I am much pleased with their quality and finish, and am satisfied that they will be found to be a good, serviceable pipe and quite equal to Scotch and American manufacture.—Yours truly, C. H. RUST, Assistant City Engineer.

All ordinary sizes in stock. It will pay you to get our prices.
