ON OTHER PEOPLES' MONEY

We have read many good editorials on credit and its abuse, but the one recently published in a Duluth newspaper as a full page advertisement, printed and paid for by the business men of that city contains some good advice. It reads:—

"One of the most foolish and inexcusable of all human practices is that of making false displays on other people's money. Mrs. — of unlimited means, buys an expensive gown. She can afford it. Her neighbor, Mrs. Jones, decides she can have a gown just as expensive as Mrs. Smith's. She can afford it. But with more envy in her heart than money in her purse or sense in her head she buys the gown anyway. A man who still owes his tailor a balance on his last season's suit is dickering with an automobile salesman for a greater trade-in allowance on a more expensive car. A young man who has developed the habit of forgetting to pay his bills manages somehow to have money to lavish on his lady friends. A hostess who has not sent her grocer a cheque since the month before last is entertaining lavishly in an effort to outdo one of her friends Such people are keeping up a front socially by the unfair means of keeping behind financially—but sooner or later the day of reckoning is bonud to come. Credit instituted as a necessary convenience and founded upon man's faith in his fellowmen is frequently abused as a result of your common desire "to keep up a front." No one can maintain a $300 pace on a $200 income. Let us continue to use credit—but only as it should be used. In other words let us be sure our incomes are equal to our promises and obligations.
