Divine Healing

To the Editor of The Advance

DEAR SIR,—Some three weeks ago an article was published in The Advance criticising John Alexander Dowie and his ways. Reference was made therein to an institution in Quebec, since which a fuller description has been received. This La Bonne St. Anne, the mother of the Virgin, whose shrine at Beaupre is the Mecca of thousands of afflicted. It is claimed that at the annual feast of this saint, recently held, a dozen or more miraculous cures were worked. For instance, a sufferer from erysipelas, who had been a cripple for sixteen months, was given the use of his limbs; a woman accidentally crippled was reported cured; a deformed boy was enabled to dispense with his supports; a martyr to rheumatism obtained relief; a blind woman partially recovered her sight, and many others of a like nature were reported.

ORIGIN OF THE SHRINE.

Two centuries ago Canada was a land of miracles, and the hosts of heaven were always ready to lend a helping hand. The Breton mariners invoked St. Anne when wind and wave threatened their destruction. Just below Quebec city, where the tide and current of the St. Lawrence meet, their fiercest conflicts occurred, assisted by contrary winds. In their extremity they vowed a sanctuary to St. Anne, conditional on her timely assistance. It was built, and the story is told how a man got hurt and disabled, and how he became cured so that he might assist in building the chapel, and how ever afterward the saint worked cures and miracles on the spot. This is the common and orthodox history as related and believed in by the inhabitants of Quebec. But more potent still are the relics of this saint Leval, the first bishop of New France, presented to this parish the finger bones of St. Anne. The greatest treasure, however, is the portion of saint's wrist, sent to Canada by Pope Leo XIII, who recently died. Its efficacy is the wonder of millions. To have it rubbed against the body afflicted with disease is the object of many a pilgrim. The bone is sealed in a metal case with a glass front, and while the healing process is being done the patient is praying to the saint, and believing that relief is near. Many a one throws away his crutches with joy to find, perhaps, he is disappointed, or that he is enabled to do always without them. Are these cures real or imaginary? It is certain that he believes that St. Anne's curative powers are numerous and real. In the church of St. Anne are reserved thousands of crutches and aids to the crippled—mute testimonies to the aid received. It is not pretended, however, that the saint heals everyone. Some aid, perhaps, may fail. There are also pipes and flasks as evidences of cure from tobacco and whisky habits.

It is true that Dowie does not pretend to have the wrist bone of St. Anne, but it is true that mute evidences of cure by way of crutches, etc., are in evidence with him very similar to the shrine of St. Anne. But instead of a bone there is Dowie himself, the self appointed Elijah, with all the glamor that ostentation can command, with utterances decisive and commanding and silly people believe him to be really endowed with almost supernatural powers, and hence he proves in many instances a fulcrum for their faith, and are healed, if one believes what is recorded But the great error is in attributing such cures to God. Divine healing, Dowie calls it. It is just as much so as those cured at the shrine of St. Anne, and no more. No sane man can believe that God would endow a man with the gift of healing out of whose mouth proceed blessing and cursing, and whose powers were concentration in aggrandisement of the lucre of this world. I recollect, when living in England, the great prominence given to the virtue possessed by a seventh son for healing purpose, and it is not questioned but cures were effected by them. These were entirely upon the same principle, viz., faith on the part of the invalid.

Since writing the above I have received a lengthy communication from the same lady referred to in my last, which I could not print without her consent. But Dowie has her so fixed that her mind is impenetrable to anything but Dowie. In reply I reminded her of her husband's daughter who recently died in the west The dear girl, whom we knew so well, wanted to live for the sake of her two lovely boys, and correspondence was had with Zion. God in his healing powers is not confined to time or place. She was invited to Zion, but for some reason did not go. How far did the supplication of these people (Zion folk though they were) reach the ear of God for their child? She died! When Dowie's own daughter was burned severely how far did Dowie's prayer reach in heaven with all Zion combined? She died also! When anyone fails of cure Dowie attributes it to the devil or some other influence. As if such influences were greater than God! Is it not shocking, that in this twentieth century so many are deluded? There are other phases of faith cures equally ridiculous, such as Mrs. Eddy's followers, Christian Scientists and others I forget.

I have tried to draw a picture of Elijah the Restorer, but have measurably failed. That he is of a very complex character none will deny. His "Leaves of Healing," of which he is the author, is a symposium of brag and self-adulation to fulsomeness. Its advertisements for money equals any stock broker of our cities. And this is Elijah, whom God has anointed as the Restorer! Do you believe it? How could any one but a simpleton believe such stuff.

I am told that a gentleman staying in town visited Zion recently to see for himself what their doings were and their modes of healing, and his conclusions were very similiar, if not identical, with those stated in my communications. Great inducements are held to settlers for Zion. You cannot get a deed for your plot, only a lease for 1100 years! In order to become a member you must be rebaptised by immersion, and receive three dips instead of one as practised by other bodies. One is led to think and ask, wherein lies the difference? That Dowie says some good things, and exacts some wholesome provisoes, is not denied; they are a necessary adjunct for his purposes to support the credulity of the people, without which his institution would suddenly collapse. The simple thereby are misled; others are drawn to Zion for opposite purposes, trade, investment and the like and for the present Elijah glories in his success—but how long?
