DANGER SIBNALS

We have, from time to time, drawn the attention of our readers to danger signals. There are certain conditions which, when they occur, should be taken as definite warnings and should send the person concerned to his doctor without delay. There is a very definite limit to the extent we may go in pointing out such danger signals, because there is a limit to what the lay person is able to see.

The trained engineer can learn from the action and the sound of his machinery whether or not it is running as it should, He will detect the slight changes which are the beginning of trouble and which the untrained person would neither see nor hear. The sailor foretells the weather, not by guess-work but by means of the knowledge acquired during years of observation. The physician prepares himself by a lengthy period of training in order that he may, first of all, acquire knowledge and secondly, the skill to put his knowledge into practice.

Most of the diseases from which mankind suffers are not of the sudden acute type; the majority of them are gradually developed over a considerable period of time. In most cases, their presence is not suspected until there is some system which sends the sufferer to his doctor for examination. That system was a danger signal which the patient recognized. There were, however, before that, danger signals which the physician, had he been given the opportunity of examining the patient, would have recognized by reason of his special training and skill.

The Periodic Health Examination, which means that regularly once a year, the individual goes to his doctor for a complete examination, provides the most practical means of which we know to detect these early danger signals. Periodic health examination brings medical skill to act when it has the most to offer. Early treatment is the greatest advantage that curative medicine has to offer, because early treatment will mean, in most cases, cure, or at least no further change. If one relies on his own skill to decide as to the need for medical care, it may mean, in many cases, advanced disease with practically no hope of cure, and a life-long disability.
