The Telescope says: Reinhardt Hunt of Carrick lost two fine head of cattle as a result of giving them in mistake a dose of saltpeter instead of salt.

After searching for a whole week over the neighboring farmyards, Mr. John Heaney, Chepstone, discovered a missing pig in his own straw stack. It seems the swine got into the stack and was unable to extricate itself until help arrived. The pig is alive and well.

Miss Emerson, of Toronto, the teacher who sued school section No. 4, of Melanethon, for $2,500 damages for loss of health through the damp and cold condition of the school, has encountered defeat. The suit was tried at the last Dufferin fall assizes, and on Monday of last week, Judge Street dismissed the action, but ordered the parties to pay their own costs. Even lawyers were under the impression she would win. Her action has been dismissed, mainly on the ground of contributory negligence. It was proven that she attended entertainments and walked a considerable distance during the week she contracted the fatal cold in the school. The defendants, however, had disregarded their statutory duty to employ a caretaker and to have fires lighted an hour before the opening of school—a duty owed to the teacher, the pupils and their parents—and have probably narrowly escaped being made liable to heavy damages by neglecting it.

The Hanover Post has this to say of a former resident of Flesherton:—"Mr. Walter Booth, who conducted a barber shop in Hanover some years ago, was in town several days recently, the guest of his brother George, at the Queen's hotel. He is just recovering from an operation performed about the middle of November last, in the Owen Sound Hospital, by which he lost part of his left leg. The limb was severed six inches above the knee. Mr. Booth has figured in many lacrosse contests, and it was principally in consequence of severe injuries sustained on the gridiron that the operation was necessitated. It appears that he had both limbs scalded with pitch, quite a few years ago. The right became perfectly well in time, but the left remained weak, and a serious of accident augmenced the trouble. During a residence in the West in the last couple of years a couple of operations were performed but without any tangible result, and amputation alone was held out to get at the root of the matter. Such being the case, he decided on having it performed at the old home town, Owen Sound, and accordingly journeyed there. He is looking splendid at present, and when he gets an artificial limb will be in comparatively good shape."

The Meaford Mirror says:—"Mr. Amos Tait had a miraculous escape from sudden death about 10.30 a. m., on Wednesday. He was working in his blacksmith shop south of Sykes street bridge, when, without a moment's warning, the weight of snow on the roof caused it to cave in. Mr. Tait happened at the time to be standing between the tire upsetter and a set of harrows, to which circumstance he probably owes his life. Two of the rafters coming in contact with these implements prevented the accumulation of shingles, bricks and mortar at the south east corner of the forge from reaching the floor with the same force that it would otherwise have done. Several of the woolen mill hands who witnessed the collapse hastened to Mr. Tait's assistance. They found him in a recumbent attitude, apparently unconscious. He was assisted to his home, where Dr. Bennet was hastily summoned. Examination revealed the fact that he had received a bad cut over the right eye, caused, it is thought, by a harrow tooth. The doctor was obliged to put seven or eight stitches in the wound. Mr. Tait was also hurt in the leg, while other portions of his body were more or less bruised. He remained in an unconscious state until five o'clock yesterday morning, when he was able to sit up. His physician is not yet prepared to say how serious the injuries he has sustained are until certain developements have taken place."
