

FORD MOYNES

on the

Oct. 8/69

MAIN STREET

in radiant splendor. It was autumn in its finest array of beauty.

Two scenic parks high up in the hills proved to be the mecca for hundreds, the Skyline park at Minden and the Skyline Lookout at Haliburton, and it was at Haliburton that the sign told the story of the imaginary trip through space to the North Pole.

Auto license plates in the round trip through Rosedale, Coboconk, Norland, Miner's Bay, Minden, Haliburton, Kinmount and Bobcaygeon were recognized from many parts of Ontario, the United States and Alberta.

Car owners from the local area would do well to hike to the Haliburton Highlands to see the ravaging beauty of the highlands on the Thanksgiving day weekend.

Geographically the highest hills on the Highlands of Haliburton are claimed to be over 1,200 feet above the level of the sea and only a little over 3,000 miles from the Arctic Circle and the North Pole. The hills, lakes and streams presented a picture of kaleidoscopic beauty to the hundreds of visitors who motored up and down dale on wonderfully good highways Sunday. "The better the day, the better the deed", goes an old saying and this was abundantly true for Sabbath day.

Camera novices and experts unrolled hundreds of feet of film and flash bulbs were flashing. It was a glorious day with the sun shining down on placid lakes and rippling streams and trees that stood out like tall towers on lofty peaks were literally awesome