The Standing Rock.

F. Birch, Wodehouse, in Archæological Report for 1903

CONCLUDED FROM LAST WEEK

Some 25 years ago I was informed by a farmer that where he had built his house and cleared his garden patch, had once stood an Indian village. He described how the lodges must have stood in a circle by the position of the beds of ashes which he found here and there, and the ashes were deep. He spoke also of finding tomahawks, pipes, bones, pottery, etc, all of which information afforded me much pleasnre, but I could not find time just then to investigate, and I little thought that I should ever be back to the same place, but it is always the unexpected that happens.

Going down the mountain road a short distance, I turned into a byway leading off to my right, and going in an easterly direction. A few minutes walk took me to a farmhouse belonging to a family by the name of Haney. I found them a very friendly people who received me kindly and soon made me feel at ease. In interviewing them I was much disappointed at first. I could not glean any tidings of my friend Smith, but after chatting some time, suddenly Mrs. Haney remembered that a Thomas Smith had once lived there, but had since died. That was all I wanteh to know. After that all was smooth sailing. I was on lot 14, con. 2, Collingwood, owned by Samuel Haney, the very place I was searching for. The village site is at the north end of the lot, and at the south end the rocks stand out in bold relief. The village had stood on slightly rolling ground, just enough so for sanitary purposes; it had an easterly exposure, and was on the west bank of a brook whose spring came from the rocks above. Miss Haney took me to search for "relics." The potato patch where we went, just north of the house, had been harvested, so that the ground was nice and clean. I counted four middens in this patch and near the bank of the little stream; each of them I should judge would be twelve feet square, and a foot deep or more, and were north of the village on lower ground. With the spade I happened to turn up some of the subsoil, and behold there was "Paint with which they were wont to daub their faces." The clay was rich in oxide of iron, and with a mixture of grease would answer the purpose quite well. Miss Haney said, "anything you find you are quite welcome to; we have given away a great number of pipes to visitors." I thanked her, and strange to say the young lady in a few minutes handed me an excellent pipe picked up at my feet and which I had passed unnoticed. It was of limestone and had a reptile carved in bold relief upon it. It was stemless and had holes bored through the bottom for a string, perfect in all but the head of the reptile, which was broken off. I found several pieces of broken pottery; two bears' tusks, a portion of a human skull and a piece of iron about fine inches inches long and two inches wide, sharpened at one end for skinning or scalping, perhaps it was a piece of a French sword blade. This goes to prove that they were in touch with the French. Miss Haney also informed me she had found a quantity of large beads, about 100 yards north of the village, but unfortunately they had been either lost or stolen. I attach great importance to these beads. I think probably they belong to a priest's rosary.

I noticed one thing in particular when I left home, namely, that everything had been cut down dy the frost, while here, on lot 11, con. 2, all was fresh and green, no sign of frost whatever. Half past four p.m. came all too soon, and it was with a slight twinge of disappointment that I found my holiday at the Blue Mountains of Collingwood had ended, but I left with the satisfaction that my exploration of St. Mathias had been successful, still I cannot prove that I am right, but my reason for writing this article is simply this—believing that Father Jones has made a slight mistake of five miles in spite of all his elaborate calculations, owing to the misty documents written by the old French chroniclers who have got things a little mized. I would like if possible to make them right as far as my knowledge goes, and to help to find the spot and perpetuate the fame of those brave, noble-hearted, self-denying missionaries who sacrificed their lives for the good of the cause they represented. The Standing Rock would have remained a mystery but for the labors of Father Jones, as well as for his very exhaustive and charmingly written essay in the Archæological Report for 1902.

Chas. Wilson of Whittington was ferociously attacked by a bull and almost killed, while leading the animal to water by a stick attached to a ring in the nose. Mr. Wilson, who is a very strong man, kept the bull partly controlled by holding onto the ring, but was about overcome when the dog appeared on the scene, and so took up the bull's attention that Mr Wilson managed to escape. Dr. Rooney, who was called, found Mr. Wilson badly hurt.

A Congregational minister at Tottenham has hit upon a novel device for raising funds to cover the cost of repairing the building. Outside the main entrance to the church a board is displayed, setting forth the details of the appeal, and by its side, affixed to the wall of the edifice, is a 10 foot thermometer, which registers in thousands. Twenty-four thousand is the highest point of which the "mercury" can rise, and this represents the number of pennies required to enable the work to be proceeded with. At present the financial temperature is "9,000."
