Maloney Lake, Artemesia

EDITOR ADVANCE,—I have been requested several times when in that section to write a short account of the rather pleasant experience those men had who went from the township of Brock to put up temporary houses on their lots in that part of Artemesia. As it will interest some to know who these men were I will give their names: Messrs. E Sullivan, T. Nash, J. Nash, P. Butler, J. Fard, John Maloney and John Coughlin, the latter joining the party at Proton and accompanying them for his pleasure to enjoy camp life for a few weeks. As there were no railroads nor much stage conveyance on their route at that early date, it took them the greater part of three days to make the journey. As they were going in from the Toronto line they purchased provisions and blankets, a plate, knife and fork, bowl and spoon for each, and borrowed a frying pan and a metal pot. As it was near sundown when they arrived at the lake they made a fire and had supper. When time to retire they spread hemlock brush under the trees, wrapped their blankets around them and composed themselves for a good sleep, but were disappointed, for shortly after they had lain down it commenced to snow, so they were obliged to chop down poles to build a camp and cover it over with boughs and brush to keep out the snow; made a good fire in front of the camp and rested undisturbed for the remainder of the night. They put Mr. Maloney's house up first and close to the lake, and the other men's houses as they went along on either side of the line. In selecting one of the number to cook this part of the work fell to T. Nash, and none envied him his task for the post was a most responsible one, as I shall explain as I proceed. When the few loaves they brought up from the line were consumed they were obliged to bake, as they were two-and-a-half miles from a settlement and no roads open to those it would be almost impossible to obtain bread. So with baking the cook's greatest troubles began. He had no tray to mix his dough, no bread board nor roller to roll out his cakes, but Mr. Coughlin soon supplied that deficiency. He chopped down a butternut tree that stood near by and made those utensils, and Mr. Maloney made a pan-jack to rest the pan handle on, as it was one of those old-time pans much used before stoves came into use. The jack was a long piece of wood with notches in it so that the pan could be raised or lowered as desired. As the pan was rather small it took a cake from it for each of the seven hearty men, and that number three times a day, which amounted to 21 cakes per day. And the pot had to do good service also, for the meat had to be boiled in time to put the potatoes on, and they in turn should be boiled in time to have the pot ready to boil water to make tea. Some days the cook would have a brace or two of partridges to dress in time to have pot-pie for dinner, for Mr. Maloney took his rifle along, and being a good shot and birds and deer numerous at the time, with no game laws to prohibit or restrict people from the benefit of these, he kept the camp well supplied with fresh meat. With all this baking and boiling the cook had to chop the fire wood—well, perhaps it was part of his contract. He was permitted to do it, supposing it wasn't. Also he had to bring the water up from the lake over roots and fallen trees, and often in his greatest hurry the pail would upset, and he was always in a hurry for fear the cake he left on the pan would burn, for if it did he would have to replace it or be left without himself, as each man had to have his cake. He had to keep an eye on the pot at the same time for fear it would upset or its contents boil over. He had the same amount of baking and boiling to do on Sunday as on week days, for they demanded their usual number of meals each day, work or no work. What annoyed the cook most was to have the men come in sometimes before the meals were quite ready and take liberties with the cakes. He often remarked to them, as the herder's wife did to King Alfred, that they were very good at eating them, but no good to prevent them from burning. When the last event of the day was over—dishes washed and things arranged for the morning—the poor cook could enjoy the evening, which, it seems, they all did and to a good extent, for Mr. Coughlin took his violin along and played on it while the rest danced till tired of that part of the program, then sang songs, told stories and played cards on the bread board which was always made ready for that special amusement. So with work and amusement they had a very good time of it. When the last house was up they broke up camp and went back to Brock to make ready to return to Artemesia, which they did a few months later and soon cleared up their lands and lived happy and contented after, and spent some pleasant evenings at the lake, for Mr. Maloney built a flat boat or raft which they sculled along with poles, and they often talked and laughed over the time they had in camp at the lake side.

Seeding is pretty well advanced in this neighborhood, some having finished.

Mrs. S. Boland, who has been quite ill, we are glad to report is improving under the skilful treatment of Dr. Brown of Markdale.

Mr. John Shannon has gone to B.C. to try his fortune. We wish him success.

Our energetic little teacher, Miss Hunt, with her pupils, worked like Trojans on Arbor day, improving the appearance of the school surroundings.

Mrs. A. Dunlop has returned home after spending the winter with her parents at Snellgrove.

The I. O. F. lodge here is in quite a flourishing condition. Ten new members were initiated into the mysteries of the order one night recently. Friday night was conundrum night. There was a soaring of wits and a good deal of fun. Truly "a little nonsense now and then is relished by the wisest men"—and women, too.

Lieut.-Col. Campbell has applied for and received permission from headquarters for the officers of the Thirty-first Regiment to adopt and wear the new regulation forage cap, staff pattern. The new headdress, which is a very handsome one, has been ordered in England, and will be received and worn by the officers at June brigade camp. A full supply of white hemlets has been received from Ottawa for the non-commissioned officers and men, and as the whole force is to be trained this year the regiment will likely turn out overstrength as in other years.

The tug W. E. Cladstone was burned to the water's edge at Wiarton.

William McDonald, an employe of the Muskoka Leather Company, Bracebridge, was killed by touching a wire fence connected with the main electric light wire. A length of insulated wire, which the electricians had been stringing as a lightning conductor, was allowed to sag against the electric light wire and the end was thrown across the barbed fence around the leather company's stable. Two men, George Perry and Wm. Beardmore, touching the fence, received shocks and mentioned the fact to McDonald, who at once laid one hand on the wire, remarking that the current was not very perceptible. He then placed the other hand on the wire, and received the full current, killing him instantly. Deceased, who was forty years of age, leaves a widow and eight children.

Drugging Won't Cure Cararrh

All the medicine in the world taken into the stomach won't cure catarrh, and it's useless to squander money on tablets, bitters and liquid remedies. Catarrh is a disease of the nasal pasages, throat and bronchial tubes. Stomach medicines can't reach these parts. It's only fragrant healing Catarrhozone which is breathed all through the air passages that is sure to reach the seat of Catarrh. No failure ever known if Catarrhozone was used. It heals and doesn't irritate; it soothes, kills the germs and therefore cures. Use only the one certain cure. Two months treatment $1.00; trial size 25c.
