MARKDALE

A Big Blockade

This branch of the C. P. R. has, for the past week, been been up against one of the most aggravating propositions it has been called upon to tackle for some time. The blizzard Tuesday last week developed into a blinding snow and wind storm, which packed the roadbed with hard snow and kept piling it on until Thursday night, when the service became completely held up, culminating in a series of accidents, which left all the rolling stock strung along the line at various points. First the evening train down from Owen Sound, drawn by two engines, passed this station an hour late. When about half a mile below Proton Station the front engine left the track and ploughed its way into a fence corner. No one was injured but the train was stalled. The evening train from Toronto the same day stuck at Mono road for 2½ hours, and arrived at Orangeville at 12.30, where it remained.

The worst accident of the day occurred at Shelburne, where three engines ran three miles down the track from that station to take water, and became fast. Three others were despatched to their assistance. In the meantime the first three two were released and backed up towards the station. The six engines collided with the result that two of the engines were badly smashed, a young man named Hartley, of Shelburne—not an employee—was killed and five others more or less injured.

As though this were not enough for one day, in the accident line, an engine on the Credit Valley branch, left the track near Inglewood, effectually blocking that branch. This series of accidents simply put a stop to all traffic.

The Thursday evening mail reached Flesherton on on Sunday at 2 p. m.

The railways were said to be in good shape to fight the snow this winter with heavy snow plows and other appliances, and until these accidents piled one on top of another, had been giving us remarkably good service. But when kismet—or fate—takes a hand, man's propositions appear to be of no avail

The first train got through on Monday night about 11 o'clock and have since been running fairly well on time. The weather this week has been mild, and let us hope the fierceness of winter has pretty well spent itself.

The Farmer's Ice House

The season of the year has arrived when the ice house may be filled. There is no reason why most farm houses may not have a continuous supply of ice throughout the summer. Where a stream or sheet of water is within reach the cost is but trifling. An ice house can be constructed very cheaply after the following fashion : Large posts six or eight inches in diametsr can be sunk into the ground to support the framework forming the walls. For a small ice house two, or at the most three, posts on each side would be sufficient. Inside the posts two-inch plank may be nailed on, the posts and the plank completing the walls of the storage. A door may be constructed of short pieces of plank kept in place on the inside by the ice itself and on the outside by the posts, As the ice is used the boards closing the doorway may be taken down one after the other. The roof may be made after any fashion to suit the builder. The shanty roof shingled would perhaps be as cheap and satisfactory as any. In the fitting of the ice house the floor should be covered about a foot deep with sawdust or dry chopped straw. The ice may then be laid upon this, leaving a space all around between the ice and the wall about one foot wide. As the ice is filled in this space should be filled with sawdust or straw, whichever is used. As each layer of ice is completed the crevices between the blocks should be filled in with the chips and soft snow, so as to exclude all air from among the ice. After the full supply of ice is in place the top should be covered a foot deep with straw or sawdust. The site for the house should be carefully chosen so that good drainage is provided. It is important that the ground below the ice should be kept dry. A building 12 feet square and eight feet high, affording space within for ice 10ft x 10ft. x 6 will contain about 15 tons of ice, which would undoubtedly be ample for all purposes on the farm. The material required to construct this building would be only a trifling cost, and a few trips to the nearest pond or creek would bring enough ice to fill the house. It is best to fill the ice house after cold weather, when the ice is most likely to be sound and solid. What is called rotten ice is filled with air spaces, which will not last nearly as long as solid ice.

Reading And Readers.

On Monday evening Mr. N. W. Campbell addressed the Presbyterian Guild on the subject of "Reading and Readers." In a lucid and pleasing way, he discussed the books to be read, the purpose for which we read, and the different classes of readers. As to the latter, he classified them in a curious way, as, the Raven reader, the one who reads books that he may caw about what he knows, and pass himself off as one of the learned. His course though ambitious, is not by any means a bed of roses. Then there is the Rip Van Winkle reader, who toils through his books, but lives all his life in Sleepy Hollow, hardly conscious that the world moves on while he sleeps. Next comes the Gormandizer, who is never able to digest the mass he draws into his insatiable maw, and, though he is ever reading, he never makes anything his own. Then follows in turn the Mushroom reader, whose work grows up in the night and withers in the morning's sun; the Scrap reader, who lives in clippings so that his mind is clothed with every design and shade till he is more fearful and wonderful than Joseph's coat of many colors. Last of all we find the reader who is like the miner or the merchantman seeking goodly pearls, who has an eye to the nuggets, and at what ever cost secures and tests them.—Chronicle.
