Two of our energetic young business men appear to be giving some important question their most serious consideration these days. Wonder if the thought of joining the benedicts ever enters their minds.

While bringing a cow into town along the Garafraxa Road on Saturday afternoon a farmer had an exciting experience, while the cow met her finish. From some cause or other the animal went wild and charged at the man who was leading her with a rope. He, in order to escape her attacks dodged behind a telegraph pole, when the cow butted so savagely that she rebounded several feet and was stunned by the collision. The injuries which the animal received from the shock were such that it was decided she could not recover and it was finally decided to kill her. To what cause bovine madness is due, we know not, but those who have witnessed it will acknowledge that there are less formidable animals than an infuriated cow. —O. S. Advertiser.
