

On the Main Street

July 2/70

During the past One Hundred years the reading population of Toronto witnessed the birth of a number of newspapers and the demise of many. One was the Toronto World an Fred Woolacott, William Street south, has in his possession a copy of the World dated 1898.

The edition is well printed and the print quite readable. As has often been the story in connection with these old editions the items were newsy and had to do with world wide affairs as well as local news and also as is often the case there was a good smattering of political news. The old paper was found be-
