Women and the Institute

The following paper was read by Mrs. Robert Best at the last meeting of the Woman's Institute, held in the town hall:

Last week I was talking to a young lady and our conversation drifted to house work. She said, "I have no desire to do house work. I think you can tell a cook just by her looks." And then she asked the question, "Do you think that domestic science training will have a refining influence on this work?" I said "Yes, I certainly do." I have since been thinking of that young woman and of the idea she had of house work, and the thought has been responsible for two or three remarks that I have here gathered together.

We have met here this afternoon with one point in view, namely the betterment of the home and all that dear name implies. How is this to be accomplished? Is it not by taking a different view of the routine work that every woman and every home maker is largely engaged in.

Mrs. Ella Wheeler Wilcox says the world needs wise mothers, wise wives and good homes, and yet women try to be everything but domesticated. I am glad to say a change has gradually been taking place. Heretofore housework was confined almost entirely to the ignorant classes, and as a consequence the work was thought ignoble. But there are no workers that need the training and knowledge as those who are ministering to the health and comfort of husband and children. All honest work is honorable and all honest work is necessary. I think if there is one thing we should impress upon people it is the nobility of labor. There is an immense satisfaction in knowing that we can do things and that we can do them well. Let us feel that all work is noble. We need not let our work degrade us, no matter how servile it may appear to be. When I awaken in the morning I do not rise immediately, but I plan the work of the day and study to see how I may save steps and accomplish as much work. I find that if I go about my work thoughtlessly I travel over the same ground several times when it is not necessary. However, a few steps more or less do not matter much if the breakfast is a success. Now it seems to me that the one thing that all workers need, perhaps farmers more than townspeople, is to keep above the thought of drudgery, to look beyond the toiling to the result. I am a farmer's wife, but not one of your drudging kind. I think any woman will agree that we can work from morn till eve if we are so inclined, and enjoy our work.

Several women have said to me, "I have no time to go to the Institute meetings. I have more than I can do at home." Now some of these women had little children at home and felt that they could not get away. But I felt that these of all women in the country should try to attend Institute meetings. That tired mother is just the one to belong to our Institute. She needs to get away. If she could get away from the children for even a couple of hours and feel free of care, she would return to her duties with new light and life. We can do things if we will, but the will is lacking and that is just the point where so many women fail. The desire is not strong enough. But they will find that when it is they will have time to get out and take the part they should in this work for the betterment of mankind. I feel it a privilege to impart anything I know to any one. I know a lady who had an excellent recipe for pickles and another lady asked if she might have a copy. "Oh, yes," she said, "if you will promise not to give it to any one else." If that woman had attended the Woman's Institute meetings she would never have said that. She would have said Yes, pass it on, give it to any one who wants it. Oh yes, the Institute broaden's us and takes us out of ourselves, and makes us try to help others. It is those women who stay at home who see the most faults in their neighbors. The more we go about and come in contact with other people we will see good in all. I think it is the duty of every woman in the community to be a member of the Institute. Surely several heads ought to be better than one. Just think of all the women in a community meeting for the express purpose of discussing house keeping and home making themes which are dear to the heart of every good woman.

I think the organization of the Women's Institute is one of the finest things that was ever done by any government. I am a Conservative, but I give credit to the Reform government for the help it gave to establish the Women's Institute.

Half Size — Heavy Lateral Wire

Frost Fences Are Strong All Around

The laterals of a Frost Fence are High Carbon No. 9 Hard Steel Coiled Wire, thoroughly galvanized—that can't be broken until the strain reaches from 1900 to 2200 pounds.

The stays are No. 7 or this same No. 9 wire.
And the two wires are locked with the Frost Locks.
That braces the fence in all directions—up down and diagonally.

We are so sure that Frost Fences are the strongest and best that we guarantee to repair, free of charge, any fence that goes wrong. That's fair, isn't it?
