Industrial Home Notes

(By an Inmate)

Those desirous of seeing the results of good gardening should call at the Industrial Home. Mr. Harness brought in a citron the other day and set the old fellows guessing its weight; some went near while others were very wide of the mark. The actual weight was 23 lbs, and he informed us that there were several similar ones, which he though one or two may possibly be heavier. He also brought in two well developd ears of corn which were something of a curiosity, every grain on one cob being ebony black, while on the other about two thirds were of a golden color, and the remainder black, the black grains being interspersed at almost regular intervals among the yellow ones, which added materially to it as a curiosity. The corn is of a California variety as are also the citrons. Tomatoes, too, were also extra fine, prolific, large and of extremely fine flavor, to which the writer can testify. By the time all the garden truck is gathered in we expect to have other things worth mentioning, although we do not expect to boast much about potatoes, they were beyond the reach of the hose, but the garden was well and frequently drenched from the water tank.

Miss Purdy has been on the sick list for some days. We understand she is very sick and that symptoms of dropsy are very much in evidence.

It was intimated two or three weeks ago that Artemesia and Proton could could boast of two of the Crimean veterans. The following thrilling incident in front of Sebastopol, is an extract of one of the many interesting letters received by your cor. from Mr, Henry Bird, postmaster, Birdell, with whom I became acquainted more than 30 years ago. He says: "From the first time that I ever went to target practice I was a marked man as a sharp shooter, and in that capacity was selected for duty in the Crimea, India and China. One night when on trench duty before Sebastopol, I, with a number of others, were selected to go out reconnoitering but warned to avoid getting too close to the enemy's batteries. The peep of dawn found us right under their guns. In the darkness we had rambled beyond our reckonings. The Russians spotted us and opened on us a raking fire. The officer ordered us to retire to the trenches; some of us refused point blank to do so, seeing it was impossible to ever reach the trenches under so withering a fire. Myself and nine others sought shelter in a cave nearby, the rest of the party made double quick time for the trenches, but not one of them got there, every mother's son of them were killed. We had not been very long in the cave when the enemy became aware of our presence, trained their heavy guns on us and soon demolished the entrance to the cave, killing eight of our number. Probably thinking we were all annihilated the firing ceased on the cave and continued in another direction. Under the roar of their guns, my comrade and I, as best we could, dug a hole in the cave with our bayonets and buried our fallen comrades, remaining there until a chance offered itself to us to regain the trenches. I have been," says he, "in many a general engagement, sortie and night attack, but I think I may count that event in the cave about as tight a fix as I ever experienced." Mr. Bird served with his regiment, the old 44th, through the Indian Mutiny of 1857-8 and the war in China, which followed colsely on the heels of the mutiny. He married a soldier's daughter when stationed in Hong Kong, who still shares the joys and sorrows of the old veteran. He was discharged at his own request after ten years of faithful service to his country, and in consideration of which, and his declining years, he was some years ago granted a pension of one shilling sterling a day and which we hope himself and his veteran lady may live many years to enjoy.

Among the few visitors to the home on Thursday last were Mrs. Robert Wright and child, of Orange Valley, accompanied by her cousin, Miss Twambley.

On Friday last your cor. received a letter from the Royal Hospital, Chelsea, Eng., informing him that he had been granted a pension of 9 d, (nine pence) per day, to take effect from the 6th Sept., 1906.
