Don't Drag Around "Half-Dead"

If You Are So Weak, So Exhausted That Your Daily Work Is Too Much for You, LOOK TO YOUR BLOOD STREAM— The Trouble May Be There

Your Blood Stream is your Life Stream. It flows to every part of your body, reaches every organ. You simply cannot be well if your Blood Stream is thin, watery, unhealthy.

Invigorate and enrich your Blood Stream with more Oxygen and more Iron—and new energy and new life will flow to your weak and exhausted system. As many thousands of grateful letters prove, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have restored to vigorous health "half-dead" people in 72 different countries in the world.

Recently a practicing physician—well acquainted with the formula of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills—prescribed them for eleven patients after blood-tests indicated a deficiency of haemoglobin and red corpuscles in their blood streams. This doctor describes the resultant improvement in the health of these blood-tested people as "nothing short of marvellous."

New Strength and Vitality Follow Use

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills increase the amount of Oxygen in the Blood, and restore the Iron your Blood needs, making it rich, red and healthy. As a result the appetite is sharpened, digestion is stimulated, nerves are restored, color is put into the skin, and flesh is put on thin frames. The whole system is filled with new strength, new energy, new vitality.

Make a start NOW on the road to restored health. Get a supply of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills from your Druggist, take them regularly—and watch results. 50 cents a package.

Powerful New Explosive

London. — Liquid oxygen provides the kick of a new explosive cartridge which, it is claimed, is cheaper, safer and more powerful than dynamite.

The cartridge looks like a big cigarette. It is a foot long and two inches in diameter. It contains sawdust, soaked in liquid oxygen.

It is then placed in the hole bored in the mine where rocks are to be blown away, and fired electrically.

A single cartridge will break down more than four tons of rock. It costs twopence compared with several shillings for an ordinary explosive charge.

After three-quarters of an hour, when the oxygen has evaporated, it ceases to be an explosive. This eliminates the greatest danger from explosives found in mines. The old method was to place a charge in a bore hole. If it is not fired at once it is forgotten. After some time—even years—that working is used again. A miner hits the forgotten charge with his pick. There is an explosion, whch may result in men being killed or injured.

After the new cartridge has been soaked it can be thrown about, dropped, or left anywhere with safety.

After an ordinary explosive has been fired the working has to be left alone for a time because of poisonous fumes liberated by the explosion. This wastes time, as no work can be done.

With liquid oxygen there are no fumes, and work can be resumed immediately after the detonation.

There is no danger of an unexpected explosion as with dynamite.

The great feature of dynamite was that it was the only explosive that struck downwards. But liquid oxygen has this property.

First Illness at 107

Croydon.—England's oldest woman, Mrs. Caroline Merriot, who was 107 last October, has just recovered from the first serious illness she has ever suffered. When she entered hospital here, she insisted on having a pint of hot tea every morning and with its help she is again back on her feet.

Needed Wife For Job

London.—Most men look for a job before their weddings.

But in North London a man has been looking for a wedding before getting a job.

He is W. T. Thorne, an assistant at the Wood Green baths who was offered the position of baths superintendent at Romford, Essex, provided he was married.

Mr. Thorne, who is a widower, explained the situation to Miss P. M. Perry, an auburn-haired cashier at the Wood Green baths.

"I placed the whole position before her, and she agreed to marry me," he said. "The Romford authorities are satisfied that she will be suitable for the duties at the baths which will fall to her as my wife."

So he got the job—and a bride.

But he was nearly disqualified at the finishing post when his bride-to-be was in a bad motor car smash-up a few hours before the wedding. Fortunately she suffered no more than shock and, athough still feeling a little unsteady on arrival at the register office, went through with the marriage ceremony as planned.

Perfect Choir in Three Days

Hull.—Sixty people who have never seen each other before will meet on the platform of Victoria station, London, on August 5, on their way to Jugoslavia to uphold the prestige of British choirs with madrigals, folk songs, and sea shanties.

They will not rehearse together till they reach Venice—and then they will sing in their hotel.

They will sail down the Adriatic, rehearsing on the deck of their ship, and when they reach Spalato, three days later, they will be a perfect choir.

The singers have been selected from choral societies from all parts of Britain, and the leader will be Norman Strafford, conductor of the Hull Choral Union.

Postie Wears Skis

Dungeness. — Here at Dungeness, within 80 miles of London, there is a postman who goes his round on "skis." He wears them to cross the stony reaches to the lighthouse where he delivers His Majesty's mails to the keeper. The skis are really wooden "back stays," about a foot and a half long and eight inches wide.

Nails Match Dresses

Paris.—A short time ago the tyrants of Paris fashions decreed that women were to wear detachable finger nails. The idea was to have tinted nails to match their evening gowns. Mounted on miniature metal frames and fitted with tiny clasps, these could be changed as easily as the dresses.

Manicurists at first expressed great fear that the new fashion would spoil their trade. Now they are reassured by the news that their services will be in demand as much as ever because, unless the real nails are very carefully tended, the artificial ones will not fit.

Golden and silver nails are already being produced. Those women who prefer a little splash of color will be able to buy them in turquoise, jade or amber hues. Some may even like to equip themselves with a differently tinted nail for each finger.

Coin Brings Radio's Best

Leipzig, Germany.—By dropping a coin in the slot of a radio set, you can listen in on a broadcast for 15 minutes from any station. A thorough trial has been made of these radio slot vendors at the Leipsiz Fair.

Since Leipzig is at the geographical centre of Europe, it was found possible to pick up stations from nearly a score of different countries in as many languages.

Old Druggist Sound Builder

Berlin.—Berlin't oldest drug store, and one of the oldest in Europe, recently celebrated its 275th anniversary.

Among its famous customers have been Bismarck, "The Iron Chancellor"; Theodore Fontaine, and the well-known poet, Wilhelm Raabe, while its present-day clients include Dr. Schacht, president of the Reichsbank, among other well-known personalities.

The shop is the "Einhorn Apotheke," in the heart of the old city. Through its almost 300 years of history it has changed little in appearance. The show-window decoration remains pretty much as it always was, with fantastic old remedies, such as "Devil's Dirt," "Dragon Blood," and "Vitriol of Iron," still on display, if not much in demand.

The drug store is well known, especially by the negro medicine men in Africa, who buy from it. They ask chiefly for mistic medicaments.

Rome Noisy As Chicago

Rome.—Rome now enjoys the unenviable distinction of ranking among the noisiest cities in Europe; in fact, some victims assert that it is as bad as Chicago. Some prominent citizens are trying to start a movement whereby motorists, the arch offenders, may be trained not to hoot at every street corner and not to play tunes on their klaxons between midnight and six in the morning.

They contend that by-laws to ensure comparative quiet are not being enforced. They plan a deputation to the governor of the city, urging him to punish the worst offenders — the drivers of city omnibuses, the property of the local government.

Artists and those who live in their particular quarter are wondering where they come in, for their old-fashioned streets and verdant courtyards are the happy hunting ground of cats.

Since Trajan's Forum has been entirely excavated, the cat colony which found homes in it have been evicted and have settled in the artists' quarters, where they roam at will, making noises which are quite as bad as the motorists. There appears to be no by-law, however, to stop this nuisance.

Elephants Nuisance to Farms

Nairobi, Kenya, South Africa.—More than 500 elephants have been killed by half a dozen white hunters within six months.

The hunters were employed by the Government of Uganda to protect native plantations and gardens, particularly in the Toro district. They paid to the Treasury 30 shillings per tusk, and were allowed to keep all tusks between 7 and 20 pounds in weight. Any tusk weighing more than 25 pounds was handed to the Government.

Rail Police Dogs

Harbin.—The South Manchuria Railway is planning to triple its pack of police dogs which now number 108 animals used for detecting train thieves. The police dogs have rendered excellent service. Forty-four of the animals are less than a year old, thirty-five six months old and twenty-nine under six months.

Woman's Heroism In Accident Is Told

Williams Lake, B.C.—Word has reached here of the heroism of Mrs. Alex. Marshall, whose husband and Edmund Hutton were drowned last week on isolated Puntzi Lake, 125 miles west of here.

When their sailboat upset in a gale, Mrs. Marshall held her husband afloat for two hours before he died, and continued to hold his body until she saw Hutton collapsing. She grasped Hutton but lost him within a few minutes when a wave struck them.

Several hours later the boat drifted ashore with her. She was in the water seven hours.

Mrs. Marshall is recovering from her ordeal. The bodies of the victims have not been found.

Dawn Notes of Birds Encircle Globe in Song

Glanton, Northumberland, Eng.—Mr. Noble Rollin, the warden of the bird station here, assisted by amateur ornithologists in many parts of the world, is engaged in the task of charting the dawn song of the birds all over the globe.

For over a year he has been working on his theory that the dawn song of the birds encircles the globe in a great wave of wild music which never ceases. Amateur enthusiasts are mailing him reports which will enable him, he hopes, to draw up a chart, timing the song of each species of bird.

British Immigrants Always Welcome

Hon. Wesley A. Gordon Sends Message of Welcome Overseas

Ottawa.—"There never has been a barrier to British migration to Canada—and there never will be," declared Hon. Wesley A. Gordon, Minister of Immigration, on the occasion of his being made a life member of the Canadian Legion of the British Empire Service League.

The honor was bestowed upon the Minister by Major J. S. Roper, Halifax, Dominion president of the Legion, "as a tangible expression of the gratitude and appreciation of the Canadian Legion for his prolonged, active interest in behalf of returned men and women."

To Major Roper, who leaves shortly to attend the sixth biennial conference of the League in London, the Minister of Immigration gave a message of welcome for the Britons who desire to come to Canada.

"Tell them Canada has gone forward over a broad field of development," said Mr. Gordon. "Tell the British people to come to Canada to take advantage of our lands, our mines and our railways, and to come with courage—not by assisted passage."

"Brave Little Girl!"

"Joyce, you are a very brave little girl," said Coroner Brighouse of Wigan, England, to Joyce Lee, 11 years of age, at an inquest on Fred Lee, Joyce's cousin, who was drowned in a canal. Unable to swim, the little girl had plunged into the canal and attempted to save the boy and was herself rescued from drowning. The coroner was so impressed by Joyce's heroism that he gave her $5. remarking: "I suppose you are like other little girls and like something pretty to wear."

Chinese to Erect Huge Movable Dam

Novel Method Used in Great Project to Control Huai River

Shanghai.—The first stages of one of the largest constructive projects ever undertaken by a Chinese Government are scheduled for completion this month. The Huai River irrigation and flood prevention project, started last December, is expected to open up 12,000,000,000 acres of land in the very heart of China proper, and control a river which has caused disastrous floods and famines continuously since the fourteenth century.

The project now started by a Nanking commission, after more than 20 years of unfruitful discussion, will be completed in stages as rapidly as funds are available. The first stage is excavation of the Changfu River. The next, to begin this summer, is a movable dam at Chingpu, Honan.

The Huai River rises in the hills of Honan, and originally emptied into the Yellow Sea. But in the fourteenth century the Yellow River shifted its bed several hundred miles southward, usurped the lower bed of the Huai River, and forced the Huai to seek an outlet elsewhere. Its flow since that time has been completely upset, so that it empties in helter-skelter fashion through a series of lakes and the Grand Canal into the Yangtse River, causing floods in unexpected parts of Honan, Anhwei and Kiangsu Provinces.

After a particularly disastrous flood in the Huai basin, an American Red Cross engineering commission came to China in 1914, and recommended that a $20,000,000 (gold) loan be raised to excavate a suitable basin for the Huai River. To this the Chinese Government agreed, but the European war soon broke out, and the loan was never raised. Surveys made at that time and later, however, showed beyond doubt that recurrent floods and famines in the Huai basin were preventable, and that an irrigation and flood prevention project could open up enough land to make it profitable. However, no Chinese Government had funds available to begin the project.

The present Government at Nanking has taken up the project seriously again. At Nanking's request, the League of Nations sent three experts, one French, one British, one German, to survey the Huai River. They carried out the survey in spite of the Sino-Japanese conflict at Shanghai, recommending a project by which the Huai River can be controlled at minimum cost. The first stage of a project based upon these recommendations was started last December.

The project calls for excavation of a number of lakes, rivers and canals, for reconstruction of seven locks in the Grand Canal suitable for ships up to 900 tons, for an extensive dike system through the flat country traversed by the river. It has been arranged in stages, which may be completed as funds are available.

Residents of the Huai basin are showing a keen interest in the work, and most of the financing thus far has been done locally.

Collecting Cobwebs A Full-Time Job

York, Eng.—Gathering spiders' webs for use in making theodolites and other scientific instruments is the unusual occupation of Mr. John Scott, of York. Armed with a box, a fork and a pot of varnish, he scours the country in search of webs.

He finds that the best spider for his purpose lives on gorse bushes suspended in a wheel type of web from six to twelve inches in diameter. With the use of varnish on a fork he collects the webs and when the varnish is set puts them in boxes.

Lovers may refuse to say good-bye for ever and yet put in two or three hours at it.
