Should Owen Sound get all that she is expecting in the way of improved shipping facilities and in other ways it will scarcely be possible to live in the same county with the average Owen Sounder. Here is a partial—only a parial, mind you—list of what the people in the county town are figuring on: An extensive street railway system; an immensely costly bridge across the bay below the harbor for vehicular and railway traffic; the Huron & Ontario railway to Meaford and Toronto; the same west to Southampton and Kincardine to Sarnia; another line of steamers operated by this company; connection with the Canada Northern railway, and another link of the Grand Trunk connecting them with Meaford. They also hope to build a new town hall—sometime. Surely this is quite a respectable evidence of ambition. There is still another lingering longing, however, that we marvel has not taken a more definite shape, and that is incorporation as a city. The town is large enough and it certainly is not modesty that prevents it from "coming out" in the civic world. The press of the town should talk it up. But then, the gifts poured upon Owen Sound in this manner would mean prosperity for the whole county as well. It would give competing lines to almost every town and village, little and big, within the county, and pave the way to opening up new industries, making of this section a hive of business and present profitable investments for capital. It is something in the nature of a dream as yet, but dreams sometimes do come true.

Nine thousand miles of railway construction are at present under way in Canada. When this is completed Canada will have 25,000 miles of railway. This means that Canada, with its six million people, is building considerably more than half as much line as the United States with its eighty millions.

The United States is now beginning to yearn for commercial union with Canada, at least so far as raw material is concerned. She would like to get our pulpwood and the product of our mines for smelting purposes But Canada is now alive to the fact that she can utilize her own raw material, and her present rate of expansion makes it unnecessary for our statesmen to pass any more sleepless nights devising ways and means of getting the good will of our cousins across the border, whose pathetic vows of affection for what we have and they have not savors of saurian lacrimal exhudations.

It will soon be up to you to do your holiday baking. We have everything you need in the line of spices, candied peels, dried fruits, etc. We guarantee everything strictly fresh and of the best quality. Give us a call. Bentham Bros.
