MICE INJURE ORCHARDS

One of the greatest hazards in the growing of an apple orchard is the danger of girdling by mice. This is especially true in orchards under sod culture, although even orchards under clean cultivation are frequently subject to considerable damage from this cause. The amount of damage caused by these animals varies greatly from year to year, depending largely upon their available supply of food.

Galvanized wire screen makes the most effective protection. The initial cost is high, but as it only has to be placed once and will last for a large number of years, it will be found cheaper in the long run. This wire should be cut into pieces large enough to encircle the trunk and leave room for expansion of the trunk, as the tree grows. The lower end should be buried about one inch in the soil, in order to prevent mice from working underneath.

A three-year-old horse was sold at a sale near Orangeville for $175.00. We have known men who put that much on a horse but they never got the horse.

In Germany it has been ordered that bands must on all occasions not only play the national anthem but also the Hitlerite hymn. Much of the "all highest" spirit of the former Kaiser seems to have descended to the present dictator.

WHERE CROPS FIT IN

There are some crops which are not well suited to very fertile soils. Buckwheat, for example, often produces too much straw and too little grain on rich soils, especially those soils which are very high in nitrogen. On the other hand, a fertile soil is essential for profitable yields of wheat and barley. Rye will grow well on rich soils but it is also a particularly good crop for light infertile soils, but, if the soil is unbalanced in its fertility by having an over-abundance of nitrogen in comparison with other elements of fertility, there will be luxuriant tops but small roots.

FARM PRODUCTS WEEK

Farm Products Week, an annual feature in the activities of the Ontario Department of Agriculture, was brought to a successful conclusion on Saturday, October 21.

Entrants to the Window Dressing Competition, conducted throughout the province during the week, numbered approximately twenty-five hundred chain and independent stores.

It is interesting to note that of more than a mile of trucks, entered in the Farm Products Parade, held in Toronto on Wednesday, October 18, fifty of these were entered by commercial firms. This would clearly indicate an attitude of co-operation, taken by Toronto merchants towards any move designed for stimulating the sale of Ontario farm products.
