Winter Hog Feeding

Winter hog feeding requires different methods from those ordinarily found successful in summer. Stunting and crippling are common during the winter and result largely from an over-supply of heavy feeds as well as from a lack of some of the vital elements. Lack of sunshine and exercise may also be contributory causes. Control measures to forestall these winter feeding difficulties are as follows: Use a variety of feeds in the ration including milk or tankage; provide alfalfa or clover hay or roots in small quantities; do not feed too heavily; allow young animals to exercise outdoors in mild weather; all stock should have comfortable sleeping quarters which are dry and free from draughts.
