THE CENTRE OF ULSTER

Belfast is a seaport and a municipal and parliamentary borough of Ireland. It was created a city in 1888 and, according to the 1926 census, has a population of 415,000. Since the formation of the Irish Free State, Belfast has been the Capital of Northern Ireland, the first parliament of which was opened by King George in 1921. In 1932, the Prince of Wales formally opened the new Legislative Buildings—a beautiful marble pile, just off the outskirts of the city at Belmont.

LARGEST IN THE WORLD

We are so accustomed, on this side of the water, to think of having the largest of this, that or the other thing, that it is difficult to imagine a city, of about half the size of Toronto, to excel in so many endeavors. Belfast has the largest shipbuilding plant, the largest tobacco factory, the largest rope works and the largest flax spinning mills in the world—some record. In normal times, these industries give employment to both sexes; a most desirable condition in any city. This is the more remarkable when it is considered that the district does not possess the advantages of coal or iron. In addition to the industries mentioned, the aerated waters and the whiskies of Belfast are known throughout the world.

A TRYING TIME

The depression has hit Belfast, as it has struck other places. The shipbuilding and the linen industries, particularly, have suffered, and unemployment, among those who do not earn enough to build up any reserve, always causes unrest.

My party visited Belfast in the fall of 1932 and, at that time the economic situation was acute. Added to this was a certain political tension, due to the fact that the new Parliament Buildings were to be opened in November and there were those in the city, of Republican tendencies, who made it their business to foment discontent. It was also stated that disturbers from the Irish Free State—which has always opposed a division in Ireland—were in Belfast to add to the disaffection.

UNREST AND STRAIN

The streets were filled with restless groups of people, walking rapidly but aimlessly from place to place. There were over 3,000 policemen in Belfast and they were standing on the corners, in groups of four to six, watching for possible trouble. Now and then an armoured car would be driven down the road or a car on which were police with a machine gun. It looked as if everyone was on the streets; women and girls, carrying babies wrapped in the shawls that covered their heads and shoulders; men with scarves around their throats and their caps pulled well over their eyes. There was a sinister and ominous tenseness in the air—everyone was anxious.

A TUSSLE WITH THE POLICE

My wife and I had gone out for a walk. We proceeded up one street and, as we returned, we deviated by way of a cross street, which led us to Sandy Row, at the foot of Boyne Bridge—any Belfast man can tell you where that is. Seeing some excitement, at the middle of the bridge, which arches over the railway tracks, we went to investigate and were almost knocked down by a crowd that was being pursued by the police. Hugging the bridge railings, we let the mob rush by and returned to the foot of the bridge and interestedly watched the mob—composed of men, women and children—preparing to attack the police with stones and bricks, picked up from the roadway. At this juncture, I happened to glance to my left and, to my consternation, I noticed a squad of police, who had stolen around the block, emerging from the shadows with drawn batons rushing to surprise the crowd from behind. We were thus between two fires and, of course, we should not have been there at all. However, there was no time to lose, so hastily pushing my wife against a wall and getting close to it myself, we awaited developments. A man, who, a second before, had stood beside us, was knocked flat; others were slugged without any discrimination and a miniature riot was in progress.

TYPOGRAPHICAL ERROR

The typographical error is a slippery thing and sly,
You can hunt until you are dizzy but it somehow will get by,
Till the forms are off the presses, it is strange how still it keeps,
It shrinks down into a corner, and it never stirs or peeps,
That typographical error, too small for human eyes,
Till the ink is on the paper when it grows to mountain size.
The boss, he stares with horror, then he grabs his hair and groans;
The copy reader drops his head upon his hands and moans—
The remainder of the issue may be clean as clean can be,
But that typographical error is the only thing you see.

WORKED ONLY ONE WEEK IN TWO

Sciatia Kept Him At Home

It is the wife who sends us this information about her husband's troubles. She writes:—"For some time past, my husband has been able to work only one week in two, on account of sciatica. He suffered so much from it that he could scarcely move for the pain. We tried many things, but without result. Then we saw in the papers an account of the good results that had been obtained from Kruschen Salts, and we decided to give them a trial. For twelve months past, my husband has been taking his 'little dose' of Kruschen every morning. Now, he has no more trouble with the sciatica, and is working regularly."—(Mrs.) M.

Doctors estimate that one-half of civilised humanity suffers from partial constipation. This condition results in an unsuspected residue of waste matter, which poisons the blood and produces sciatica, as well as many of the mystery aches and pains from which people suffer. Kruschen keeps the organs of elimination in perfect trim, so that every particle of poisonous waste material is expelled gently, regularly and completely.

Motor Sales Great Gain

Studebaker Reports the Best Month for Two Years in Sales

Walkerville, Ont.—Cheery evidence of prosperity is found in a report released recently by the Studebaker Corporation of Canada, Limited.

According to C. S. Fletcher, sales manager of the Studebaker Corporation of Canada, Limited, Studebaker shipments for the moth of March just finished exceeded any single month's shipments for the previous 21 months.

That this increase is a definite trend is further borne out by the fact that Studebaker entered April with more bonafied orders on hand than have been shipped for any of the past 22 months. April is predicted to be the best month, with one exception, for the last four years.

In the early part of February, shortly after the big metropolitan motor shows in Canada and the States, the Studebaker officials foresaw a huge shortage of cars in the early spring. Plans were immediately laid for greatly increased production and large commitments were released to all suppliers. The Studebaker plant has been going at top speed since that time, but despite these early preparations it has still failed to catch up with the large bank of orders now on file

To quote Mr. Fletcher, "This remarkable increase in our business is attributed to the introduction last February of the Special Dictator series, a line of Studebaker automobiles listing at less than $1,000 at the factory, and to the intensive advertising exploitation which has been put behind these cars.

"The last few years have brought drastic revisions in public buying methods. The great majority of people are no longer fooled by superficial appearance. They are extremely cautious about parting with the dollar and are looking keenly for value and quality in their anticipated purchase.

"To take every advantage of the great wave of buying this year which has already definitely manifested itself, we have made very comprehensive sales and advertising plans.

"We have every reason to believe that Canadian commerce is definitely on the up-grade, and we feel that our product, backed up by sound merchandising plans, will enable us to be among the first to feel the effects of the strong recovery trend."

Such reports as these, indicating a very decided up-turn in business throughout the world generally, are definitely gratifying to everyone interested in Canadian business. It is hoped that the business improvement reported by the Studebaker Corporation of Canada, Limited, may be similarly prevalent throughout the Dominion.

Prince Inspects Giant Cunarder

Glasgow—To a chorus of buzzing machinery and the rattle of hydraulic riveters, the Prince of Wales was recently hoisted in a tiny steel cage 200 feet up the side of the giant Cunarder "534" on her stocks at Clydebank He went up for a looksee."

The Prince came to Glasgow to open a Boy Scouts' exhibition and he stood bareheaded while 15,000 Scouts and Girl Guides shrilled excited cheers.

Later he seized an opportunity to see work progresing on the giant liner in the hands of some thousands of laborers.

The ascent in the cage was to reach the "A" deck, where he plied the officials with questions from the bird's eye vantage.

A Man's Prayer

Let me live, oh mightly Master
Such a life as men should know,
Tasting triumph and disaster
Joy and not too much of woe.
Let me run the gamut over,
Let me fight and love and laugh,
And when I'm beneath the clover,
Let this be my epitaph:
Here lies one who took his chances
In the busy world of men,
Battled luck and circumstances
Fought and fell and fought again.
Won sometimes but did no crowing,
Lost sometimes, but didn't wail,
Took his beating but kept going,
Never let his courage fail.
He was fallible and human,
Therefore loved and understood,
Both his fellowmen and women,
Whether good—or not so good—
Kept his spirit undiminished,
Never laid down on a friend,
Played the game till it was finished
Lived a sportsman till the end.

Child Welfare Section League of Nations Meet

GENEVA—The effects of the economic depression on children and young people was the main subject under discussion at a meeting of the child welfare committee of the League of Nations which began recently.

Also on the committee agenda was a proposal that official documents and particularly birth certificates shall not reveal the fact of illegitimacy so that the child may not be hampered in life from the start.

Storage holdings of dressed poultry in Canada on January 1 of this year amounted to 11,649,762 pounds, some 40 per cent greater than at the same date on the previous year.

Test of Fairness

I tried out an abridged questionnaire, addressed to eight boys and girls, ranging in years from seven to 13. They were all children of good families, of normal intelligence, of fairly comfortable circumstances.

I asked them just one question "If you were an aviator, about to take part in an air race, the winnings of which would bring you a large prize and much glory; and if by accident you discovered unguarded the 'plane belonging to your closest rival, the person most likely to beat you in the race, would you damage that person's 'plane so it could not compete with yours? If not, why not?"

Here are the eight answers just as they were given to me:

1. (Boy, 10.) No. I wouldn't because you always get caught doing anything like that

2. (Boy, 11.) If I was sure I wasn't found out. I would give the money to my mother. (Evidently something gnawing at the conscience here.)

3. (Girl, 10.) I would think it was a good thing if I could keep the other 'plane from starting, because if it did I might not win the race.

4. (Boy, seven.) I don't know how to fly.

5. (Girl, 13.) I don't think it could happen because they always have watchmen at hangars.

6. (Boy, nine.) No, I wouldn't do it because he might find out and damage my 'plane.

7. (Girl, eight.) He would deserve it if I did it, because he ought to watch his 'plane before a race.

8. (Boy, 12) The important thing is to win a race when you are in it, and if I could do anything to help me win, I would think it all right to do.

Average Man Uses Only 700 Words

How many different words does the average person use in his ordinary conversation? In a hasty look at the dictionary one might assume that his vocabulary represented a reasonable percentage of its voluminous pages Yet he may be surprised to learn that the average American goes through life without the need of more than 700 words in which to make himself understood.

The American Telegraph and Telephone Company decided to investigate the number of words used over the telephone in order to give a scientific aid to its engineers in devising mechanism best suited to American speech.

Out of a total of 80,000 words in the conversations selected at random from the New York toll circuits, to which the investigators listened-in, there was no more than 2,240 different words. On an average, each speaker used only 700.

As a means of communication the telephone does not lend itself to the art of general conversation. Only on rare occasions does one employ its mechanical assistance for other purpose than the moment's need.

The ordinary telephone talk is not to be classed with those delightful periods of human contact when conversation responds to the stimulus of a fascinating personality. Speaking face to face is apt to pump from an intellectual well sonorous phrases and a magnificent variety of words which the telephone does not tap.

But it is a sad truth that in the usual conversation our thoughts do not require sumptuous garb. The average of 700 words may be sufficient to cover the patios of the office, the golf course, the stock market or the weather. In those subjects which so often predominate in the fine and gentle art of daily speech, the telephone doubtless holds its own.—Menominee Herald-Leader.
