EXPENSIVE MARKETING

The carrying over of cattle from one market to another is an expensive business, detrimental to the interests of both producer and trade. It is the opinion of the department that livestock would show a much more even trend if the habit of loading up every Monday with the week's supply were discontinued. Better distribution of deliveries to the stockyards would seem to be the answer. In the Province of Ontario, motor truck deliveries have reached a very heavy volume. At Toronto almost half the supply of cattle, during the month of May, was received off trucks, and a large percentage arrived at the market without pre-notice.

Who was the returned man from Flesherton on the corner of King and Yonge streets in his pajamas early Sunday morning?
