TRUCKS MOVE HISTORIC HOUSE

When Col. John Graves Simcoe, Lieutenant-Governor of Upper Canada was enroute to Niagara for the opening of the first provincial legislature in 1792, he paused in Kingston long enough to meet members of the Legislative Council and arranged details for the experiment in representative government. The historic conference was held in a house at the corner of Queen and Bagot Streets. The building remained on the same site for 143 years and then the Kiwanis Club in order to preserve the structure, had it removed to Kiwanis park, Simcoe and his colleagues, could they have returned to see the moving in progress, would have noted the method of transportation not even thought of in their day. Two trucks were hooked to the house, which was placed on rollers, and pulled it quite easily down the thoroughfare.

But the man worth while

NUTRITION

An interesting and instructive development in medicine has been the direction of attention towards the patient as an individual, rather than to focus attention on a diseased part or on a disease.

We know that if a person is to be healthy he must have health in all parts of his body. Health implies the harmonious and efficient working of all parts of the body and mind.

The old idea that you ate fish as food for your brain and iron for your nerves is discarded. We have learned that the whole body must be properly fed if any one part is to be adequately nourished. Furthermore no one article of food goes to make brains or nerves.

When something goes wrong within the body, even though the ill effects may seem to be limited to one part, it is the whole body which is disordered or diseased. You cannot have diseased lungs and have a healthy body other than the lungs. The body is a living functioning unit, not a collection of unrelated parts.

When treatment has to be considered, no longer is it a question of what is the right treatment for a diseased stomach, but rather what is the best treatment for a man whose stomach is diseased.

These may seem to be the same but it is not so. Some years ago, typhoid fever cases were starved because it was feared that food might injure the ulcerated bowel. This may have been good treatment for the bowel but it was definitely hard on the patient. Now that typhoid fever patients are being better fed, more satisfactory results have been obtained, because the general needs of the patient, rather than one part of his body, have received consideration.

A number of faddy diets have come into existence because of their supposed value in some particular condition. Nearly all of these are faulty because they fail to provide for the general well-being of the persons concerned.

This does not mean that proper care and attention are not being given to the treatment of disorders of functions and to disease. All that is implied is that, together with such treatment, there should go an equal amount of care and attention to all the physical and mental parts which make up the individual requiring attention.

CRY AND CRY AGAIN

Dad—Say, why all the racket.

Son—Mother said if I kept on crying a big dragon would appear, spitting fire. I've done my best, but it hasn't come yet.
