THE QUEBEC JUBILEE.

The great gathering that is taking place at Quebec this week is attracting many thousands of people to the oldest city in Canada, and the pageants will no doubt be worthy of their presence. Three hundred years does not seem a very long time for a nation to grow up as Canada has grown. When Champlain founded Quebec, could he have had in his wildest dreams an inkling of the great things that were in store for this northern continent? When Wolf and Montcalm died on the field of Abraham they could scarcely have foreseen the amity and good will that to-day binds the two nations together as Canadians first, last and all the time. Imagine the great processions of soldiers and civilians, English and French, commingled, that are taking place this week in the Capital city down the St. Lawrence, and ask yourselves what it means. It means loyalty to our Canada first, and a national handshake between two nationalities whose remote differences have been forgotten in the labor of building up an asset of which both are justly proud. If the spirits of the dead are allowed to visit this earth one could easily picture the shades of Wolf and Montcalm walking proudly arm in arm at the head of the hosts to the roll of drum and bugle's blast upon the plains of Abraham, where their earthly enmity ceased on September 13, 1759. There would also be Champlain, the founder, and Le Caron, his companion; La Salle, the intrepid explorer, whose bones lie in Louisiana; and many others whose work still shows in the quaint old gulf city. The spirit of Madeline of Vercheres is not departed, but has existed all these years as shown through the labor of both French and English to develop our nation, which belts this great continent from Prince Edward Island to the Pacific, and embraces everything necessary for the existence of mankind. Three hundred years! They have seen a great work well performed, and the demonstration now in progress at Quebec is a fitting flash of spontaneous jubilation that should make one's blood course more warmly through the veins. It makes one long to see the great panorama, but somebody must stay at home. Those who can should see and participate.

Seven prisoners escaped from Toronto jail and have not been recaptured.

S. & J. Hisey of Creemore bought a cow with a calf at her foot, the calf being several days old. On the way to the city the cow gave birth to another calf, the exact image of the other, but smaller.

James Hicks, who drives Lloyd & Scully's egg and butter wagon, relates the experience which a farmer near Dornoch had with snakes recently. The Dornoch man had quite a large flock of hens but could not account for the fact that he got but very few eggs, and was thinking of disposing of them all and getting a fresh lot when he made a discovery. In his hen house one day he found a snake and eventually killed three dozen of the reptiles of the black and garter varieties, which were nested among some bark material in the hen house. After killing the snakes he found that his hens yielded a good supply of eggs.—O. S. Advertiser.

A serious accident occurred at Bognor the other day, the victim being Miss Alice Mellafont. Miss Mellafont had just returned from a drive and was in the act of unhitching the horse when the animal took fright and bolted. As it happened, the unfortunate girl had her arm encircled by the knot of one of the traces with the result that she was dragged in the wake of the maddened horse. For fully a quarter of a mile she was dragged along the street before the runaway was brought to a standstill by a dog. The animal apparently realizing that something was wrong viciously attacked the horse and the appearance of Wm Reid on the scene effectually checked the latter's wild progress. Miss Mellafont was unconscious and presented a pitiable spectacle, her face and hair being covered with blood. No bones were broken, although her body and limbs were covered with a mass of contusions and cuts. She was conveyed to her home where she now lies in an extremely critical condition.

On the 6th inst. the store of Mr. H. L. Tarbush of Angus was broken into and a quantity of goods stolen, including some jewellery, jack-knives, boots, hats and postage stamps, ladies' belts and other articles. Mrs. Conard, who lives near the store, happened to see some men in the neighborhood late at night and from the description given by her to Detective Beardsley, to whom the case was entrusted, Wm. Waddell was arrested in Toronto. He was brought to Barrie and taken to Angus for trial. He admitted his guilt, but implicated four others in the affair and the officers are now after them. Waddell at one time lived in Angus He was committed for trial. The Painswick postoffice was also entered by thieves the night after the Angus robbery and it is supposed by the same parties.
