Soya Beans And Corn For Silage

On "The Maples" farm, near Kemptville, Ont., owned and operated by Dr. Frank T. Shutt, C. B. E., and his nephew, A. A. Holmes, a small area of newly-broken land was sown with soya beans, in the spring of 1935. The stuff grew like Jack's bean-stalk and soon presented a problem as to what could be done with it. The stalks were heavily podded and might have yielded a crop of seed, but the crop kept on growing so long that maturing the seed was out of the question; and still it grew until the idea of making hay out of it was dismissed.

Dr. Shutt. having been Dominion chemist for 46 years, knew something of the chemical composition of soya beans and that they are high in protein and carbohydrates, considerably higher than corn in this respect. So why not put the growthy crop of soya beans in the silo with the corn? Thus was the problem solved, and the resultant silage proved most palatable and nutritious.

This year at "The Maples" another bumper crop of soya beans was grown on a larger acreage, an area fertilized last year for potatoes and mangels, and the soya bean crop responded to the residual fertility in the soil. Again the crop was ensiled with the corn, and the results obtained warrant the adoption of this method as standard practice.

HOW TO PREVENT COLDS

What do we know about the cause of colds?

The name "Cold" shows that we have an idea that a chill has something to do with causing it. When an idea lasts for hundreds of years, there is sure to be some truth in it.

A chill, however caused, whether by wearing insufficient or unsuitable clothing, or by sitting in a draught thus causing the body to be colder in one part than another, or by getting yeur feet wet, or by getting some other part of your body wet and by that wetting being prolonged, as when you sit in wet clothes—such a chill is not the cause of a cold. All the chill does is to lessen your resistance, to pull you down below par in warmth and comfort, to affect your circulation so that your skin does not enjoy the warmth and comfort of your circulating blood, which keeps your whole body warm, from the centre to the skin. The good circulation of blood in your skin is particularly important. By all means, then, if you want to prevent colds, avoid chilling and keep yourself comfortable. If you get wet, keep moving, walking smartly, or running if you can, until you get to where you can take off your wet clothing, rub yourself hard all over with a bath towel until your skin is in a glow and put on dry, warm clothing.

If symptoms of a cold or other illness develop, then the patient should stay in bed in his own room until the symptoms subside. This is the best thing for him and it is necessary in order to protect others. A cold is a general infection. It affects the whole body. The cause of a cold is a germ or perhaps it is something that is like a germ, called a virus. Any discharge from the nose or throat, all of the patient's secretions are full of this infection. It is thus easily transmissable by hands, handkerchiefs, door-knobs, etc, or by coughing and sneezing, and the only way to avoid spreading the infection is that the patient should stay in bed in his own room until the period of infection is over.

Children take any disease, including colds, more easily than grown-up people. Children with a cold, however slight, should never be allowed to go to school. A child with a cold comes to school, exchange pencils or books or touches hands, or drinks out of a common cup, etc., so that the infection passes from one child to another and in a short time nearly all the children in the class may be infected and carry the infection home with them. The infection is carried further next day by the members of their families and so the Common Cold becomes epidemic in the community.

No one with a cold should be allowed to spread the infection to others in the house, school, office, factory, street car, church, theatre, or anywhere else. If the first case were cared for safely and comfortably in bed, most colds would be prevented.

Idle — Wickens

A quiet wedding was solemnized at the Presbyterian Manse, Thornbury, when Iva Muriel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Wickens, became the bride of Arthur Bolton Idle, son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Idle of Clarksburg.

The bride wore a becoming dress of blue crepe made on princess lines and was attended by Mrs. George Wilkinson of Heathcote. The wedding party then motored to the home of the bride's parents near Kimberley, where a wedding dinner was served to about twenty guests. The dining room was decorated in pink and white. The table was centred with a beautifully decorated wedding cake. The newly married couple will reside in part of Mr. Gordon McMullen's residence, East Mountain, where the groom is engaged as teacher.

Confidence is the parent of courage and hope the herald of success.

If your plan cannot be changed as your work develops, you have a poor plan to start with.

"Ay," exclaimed Sandy to his English friend, "Scotland's the finest place on earth."

"Then since you like it so much," protested the Englishman, "what made you leave it?"

Sandy grinned.

"Ah, weel, he chuckled, "it was like this. In Scotland everybody was as clever as masel', and I couldna' mak' muckle progress. But here—here—I'm getting on brawly, ye ken."
