A Daily Thought.

Forget the praise that falls to you
As soon as you have done it;
Forget the praise that falls to you
The moment you have won it;
Forget the slander that you hear
Before you can repeat it;
Forget each slight, each spite, each sneer
Wherever you may meet it.

Remember every kindness done
To you whate'er its measure;
Remember praise by others won,
And pass it on with pleasure;
Remember every promise made
And keep it to the letter;
Remember those who lend you aid,
And be a grateful debtor.

Remember all the happiness
That comes your way in living;
Forget each worry and distress,
Be hopeful and forgiving;
Remember good, remember truth,
Remember heaven's above you,
And you will find through age and youth
True joys, and hearts to love you.

A Letter From Washington

Dear Mr. Editor,—

Washington has a population about the same in number as that of Toronto. Its growth has not of late years been nearly as great as that of our Queen City. It has all the Governmental buildings which give it a charming and impressive appearance—it is truly the White City. It was laid out on the plan of L'Enfant, a Frenchman. The streets run east and west, and north and south. Through these pass diagonally wide avenues, making access easy to all parts of the city. The roadways are well paved and the wide streets and sidewalks are well adapted for processions. The designer evidently knew the American passion for parades, and laid out the city for that end. Between the White House and the Capitol runs Pennsylvania Avenue. It is 160 feet wide. This is the route followed by the Inaugural procession. At the east of the Capitol, in an immense portico, the oath of office is administered to each new President. The inaugural procession is formed and passes around the Capitol westward along Pennsylvania Ave. to the Treasury grounds, and the White House, a distance of over one and one half miles. Platforms are erected in every available space along the route from which to view the procession. For a seat in a choice location $5 is asked, others sell as low as 50c a sitting. Some choice windows are held at $150 each. Rooms at the hotels are spoken for months in advance. Private houses open and take in roomers. The whole city throbs in anticipation of the coming event, which, it is expected, will be the greatest and grandest that has ever been. Taft has grown wonderfully since elected. It is simply amazing how many friends he now has, particularly in Washington. All who wish preferment are striving to do him honor and come to his notice. It is a scramble for office and the anxiety to stand high in his favor leads to much vain display.

To describe the different buildings in detail is beyond my pen. I shall merely touch on a few of the most prominent.

The Capitol ranks among the finest buildings in the world. It is 751 feet long and 350 in greatest width, and covers nearly four acres of ground. The crest of the statue of Liberty crowning its dome is 288 feet high. After its partial destruction by the British in 1814 it was restored, and has been added to from time to time until today its majestic dome is the pride and inspiration of every son of the Union. The total cost of the building and the various additions is said to approximate to $15,000,000. The newer portions are built of Massachusetts marble, and the older parts are painted white, save the color in the flag.

The Senate and the House of Representatives are both in session. The members of these bodies, like our own members of Parliament, seem generally very ordinary men. Their speeches show more vigor and partizan bias than culture and statesmanship. A few are strong, clear-sighted men with a vision of the present and future greatness of the nation ever in view. The feeling that we are "it" seems to prevail here, although to a less extent than in New York.

The Congressional Library building stands about 100 yards from the Capitol, and is certainly a beautiful and remarkably well-built structure. The arrangements for transmitting and recording books taken out are well calculated to impress the visitor with the excellency of the system adopted. A member of the Capitol may desire a certain book or document to illustrate his point in debate, a message by 'phone reaches the library, and an underground carrier soon places the book desired in the Senate Chamber. Here on file are the chief newspapers of the world, and visitors may read their own papers when spending a few days at Washington. Students anywhere in the U. S. wishing any volume can have it sent to them to be returned when done with it. There is 58,000 miles of shelving or room for about 5,500,000 volumes when filled.

The National Museum is well worth a trip here to see. It would require days to really see one or two departments of this storehouse of the world's progress. Chairs around tables with books of reference are provided for visitors. Attentive and gentlemanly guards are always ready to direct visitors and no fees are charged nor tips looked for. The Smithsonian Institute is practically part of the Museum The eye at length tires of seeing and demands rest. This would be an ideal spot for an inquisitive boy, hungry for knowledge. He could revel in birds and beasts of all kinds.

One large building is devoted exclusively to the manufacture of paper money, government bonds and stamps. Each bill passes through 52 different hands before it is completed, and a large number of ladies are employed in this work. It requires fineness of touch and quickness of eye to detect any flaws or imperfections in the work. Each operation must be perfect in its kind. When the bills have passed a certain stage in their manufacture they are taken over to the Treasury Department for completion. To me, the most interesting part was the counting. The guide assured the visitors that the ladies counting the bills counted 60,000 in seven and one-half hours each day, and each package must be initialed by the counter, thus practically guaranteeing the accuracy of her work. Each package is counted three times and should the counters make an error they are charged with the amount lost. Worn and damaged bills are returned to the Treasury for description and redemption. Frequently counterfeits are detected among returned bills. Many of these counterfeits have passed business men and skilled bank tellers without detection. The skilled counter is able to detect the bill generally by the touch rather than by the eye. It seems incredulous, but the workers assert positively that over 30,000 returned bills are examined and counted in a day by each counter, and rarely does an error occur in the work. How the eye can take in each bill, the signatures, markings and all that is necessary to note the difference between good and bad money at the rapid rate of counting is certainly wonderful, and shows what may be done by training and practice.

The house to which Lincoln was carried after being shot at the theatre is turned into a sort of Lincoln museum by a shrewd Scotchman. He has secured a part of a rail that Lincoln is certified by declaration to have split. The books written on Lincoln form a considerable library. His letters are very interesting and prove him to have been a strong man.

Across the river on the Virginia side stands, on a lofty eminence, the home of General Robert Lee. It came to him through his marriage to a Miss Custis, a descendant of Martha Washington. The estate consisted of about 11,000 acres. When Lee cast his lot in with the Confederates this estate under a pretext of sale for taxes, was confiscated by the Federal authorities and was turned into a national cemetery and artillery yard. Later, part was made into a model farm and the balance remains in woodlands. Lee felt it a great injustice that he should be deprived of this beautiful estate, and on his death action was taken by one of the heirs against the United States government for recovery of the property. This action was successful. The government then bought the property for $150,000. It is now open for visitors, and those dying in defence of their country are honored with a resting place in these historic grounds.

I cannot linger longer over the many things of interest in connection with Washington and its surroundings. I have trespassed too much already, Mr. Editor, but would like to say in closing that condicions of life in Ontario are much to be preferred to any seen in this trip. If Ontario farmers could but see the almost sterile soil of the middle Atlantic states they would value their heritage more highly than ever before. With apologies to the poet I would say—

Before all lands in East or West,
I love my native land the best,
With God's best gifts 'tis teaming,
Both gold and silver here abound,
And men of noble hearts are found,
And eyes with joy are beaming.

—Yours, C. W. Chadwick.

Twenty-five years ago it was difficult to sell spring wheat flour for pastry at any price.

People didn't want it—they were using soft, winter wheat flour, and saw no reason for changing.

But hard wheat flour was persistently pushed. The women tried it and succeeded with it,—to-day hard wheat flour is the favorite for Pastry as well as for Bread.

Ogilvie's Royal Household

is hard wheat flour at its best—milled by modern methods, retaining all of the good of the wheat. It is without an equal for every kind of baking in which flour is used. 16
