IT MIGHT HELP

People who drive cars should read the newspapers. They should watch for the results of some of the many court cases in which motor accidents furnish the central theme. They might learn a great deal.

Mr. Justice Jeffrey gave two decisions in damage claims in London. In one case a retired farmer and his wife had been struck when crossing a street in London, and the amount awarded there was $12,000.

The other was related to an automobile smash near Wingham in June of 1934, and the amount involved there was $20,500.

The average man does not possess $12,000, nor could he raise it. The number who have $20,500 or any hope of ever accumulating that amount is smaller, and yet these are the figures which are being dealt with in auto smash cases in the courts today.

It might do no harm to stick those two figures some place in the car where you can look at them when you are inclined to step on the gas and take even a small chance.

The days are getting noticeably longer, and the sun agreeably stronger.
