Farewell to Flesherton

Rev. G. C. Little's Going --- Some Explanations and a Warm Tribute

The Flesherton Presbyterian church was crowded on Sunday afternoon, when Rev. Mr. Little preached his farewell sermon. At the close the rev. gentleman said he would try to give an answer to the query why he was leaving the charge. He had been asked privately to state the reason for his going, but he had refrained from speaking on the subject, as he thought it better that the explanation should be given in an official way. As he looked back over the two years of his pastorate, he felt that he had nothing to regret as far as the treatment of the people and the work of the pastorate are concerned. He was not leaving because of any conditions existing in the congregation that would make it unbearable for him to remain. He was feeling perfectly happy. It was true that there had been some misunderstandings at first, but he believed pastor and people now knew each other better than they did a few months ago.

His first trouble was the loss he personally sustained a few months after he began his work, in the death of the late Mr. VanDusen, and it was no reflection on any one else to say that in the taking away of that gentleman he had lost his right-hand assistant. However, he was neither discouraged by that loss, nor by the loss of other faithful workers of the congregation who had moved away.

The real cause of his departure, however, arose from the fact that the charge has become unmanageable and unwieldy. It is a field in which a minister cannot do his best work, as it is at present constituted. He had been led to believe that some attempt would be made to reduce the amount of travel necessary to cover the field. He did not think a minister's time ought to be frittered away in wearing out horse shoes and buggy tires. He felt that he could not do himself justice as a pastor and preacher, and spend so much time on the road. But no step had been taken to change the condition of affairs, and none was apparently being undertaken, and he felt it was necessary for the preservation of his health to make a change. He regretted the necessity for so doing. He had never shirked his duty to save himself, and he had taken little or no recreation since he came among them. Though granted four weeks' holidays a year, he had only taken four weeks in the two years he had been here, instead of eight, because he believed his work would not permit of a longer cessation from labour. But in the last six months he had been warned that he must take greater care of his throat than he had been doing. He had no reason to leave save for purely health considerations, and but for the facts he had stated he would not have preached in Paisley or anywhere else. He did not think he was mercenary. He was not going to Paisley simply because of the little additional salary which would be paid to him, but he realized that if he remained here he might develop some throat trouble that would greatly hinder his future for the remainder of his ministry. Do not, he pleaded, let anyone go away with the impression that a minister preaches simply for the salary he receives. He had men sitting before him who can make double or three times the amount of money paid to him. When he entered the ministry, at the instance of the Missionary Committee of the Presbyterian church, he left his home and travelled thirty-five miles every Sunday in the northwest ministering to the needs of the settlers, and to-day he was not influenced by financial considerations, but out of necessity for preserving his health and strength.

He liked living in Flesherton. There was no spot he would rather live in than here. It is a beautiful place by nature. "It is," he confirmed, "a clean centre of population. It is a quiet village. It is a place where I would like to raise my boys. It is a place which I would rather choose for that purpose than many other towns and villages, in which there are open bar rooms. You have in Flesherton also a well-conducted newspaper, which ought to be encouraged by the people of the district. I have failed to see in that newspaper anything that is not clean or that is not calculated to advance the best interests of the community, and Mr. Thurston deserves the patronage of every well-wisher of the community. I have been in places where the local paper was a disreputable rag, and not fit to be put into the hands of any family, but you have in The Flesherton Advance a paper, which if not preaching morality directly is doing so indirectly. The school priviliges possed by Flesherton are also a great inducement to families to stay here."

In conclusion Mr. Little expressed the earnest hope that the reasons he had given for his removal from Flesherton would be accepted as the only reasons, though he knew there were always people ready to mis-represent the facts in such matters. He trusted the congregation would continue to prosper, and that they might soon have a pastor happily settled in the midst of them.

Walker Bros. and Kennedy, who had contracted for the construction of Owen Sound's filter beds, made a mistake in their tender which cost them about $1,000. Mistakes do not pay, it seems.

Nothing in the way of a cough is quite so annoying as a tickling, teasing, wheezing, bronchial Cough. The quickest relief comes perhaps from a prescription known to Druggists everywhere as Dr. Shoop's Cough Remedy. And besides, it is so thoroughly harmless that mothers give it with perfect safety even to the youngest babes. The tender leaves of a simple mountain shrub, give to Dr. Shoop's Cough Remedy its remarkable curative effect. It is truly a most certain and trustworthy prescription. Sold by all dealers.
