A GOOD YEAR

The present has been a good year in Canada and should make money easy for the next few months. The pessimist finds it difficult to secure sufficient ammunition to keep his popgun working, now that the threshing machine has demonstrated a splendid yield of all kinds of grain. Everything seems to have thriven this year—root crops, grain and fruit (including hen fruit) and the farmer who is depicted with a long face in cartoon is no longer a typical subject. The potato crop in Canada is said to be enormous and prices for that commodity will be low, but for all other produce that the farmer raises long prices will prevail, and as a consequence many mortgages will be paid off and home comforts secured. The yield of wheat in Ontario has been extra good this year and the quality is much beyond the average, some millers reporting grain weighing as high as 64 lbs. to the bushel. Thanksgiving time is approaching, and never before did the people of this country have better reason to celebrate that day in a befitting manner than they have this year.

Weather conditions: Storms are still raging around the north pole.

At the Canadian Manufacturers' Association convention held in Hamilton last week the question of forming a tarriff commission to revise the tarriff was thoroughly discussed and the principle endorsed. The appointing of such a commission was advocated in these columns a few weeks ago.

With this week we enter upon the grind of local fall fairs. Friday of this week Flesherton, next Friday Priceville and the following Wednesday Osprey fair. With a prosperous season and barns bulging farmers should all patronize the local fairs, swap stories, discuss live stock, make sales, purchases, etc., etc. The local fairs are profitable events if handled properly by both directors and public.

A serious outbreak of typhoid fever at Cobalt is puzzling the authorities. The hospital there is full of patients and many have left and are in hospitals at other points. The cause has not been located, but a general cleaning up has been ordered. There are two great sources of contagion in typhoid—the germs are carried in water, and also, it is said, as would seem reasonale, by flies. Cobalters say they have good, pure water, so possibly flies are the great carriers of contagion in that district. A wholesale campaign against these household pests might go a long way towards stamping out the disease.

According to the Scientific American, telephonic vision is now an assured fact, two Danes having solved the question of carrying vision electrically so that the persons speaking over a telephone can actually see each other as they converse. This accomplishment has long been sought by electrical experts and the fact that its success has been chronicled by such a high scientific authority places it beyond the realm of hearsay. The new invention will have the effect of popularizing telephonic conversations in many ways. The young man who desires to see, as well as hear, his absent young lady friend, will probably find the greatest consolation in the new invention, and the three minutes will more often be exceeded. One of the more practical uses of the invention, however, will be its use for purposes of identification of criminals and others, in which it will work an immense saving of time and expense.

Toronto Saturday Night extols the the British Columbia judge who refused to punish some Chinese gamblers because white men gambled too. This new editor of Saturday Night appears to have a somewhat distorted moral vision, judging by much of his recent writings. The judge who would refuse to punish a criminal because other criminals are not punished, is not fit to sit on the judicial bench. What right has such a judge to presume that others who are not brought before him are guilty? He is supposed to take cognizance only of the cases that are tried in his court. Moreover, his oath of office makes it imperative for him to administer justice according to the laws that are framed for his guidance. In this case we find a judge flouting the law he has sworn to administer, without fear or favour; and we also find the Toronto paper before-mentioned praising the act as one of "even handed justice," and hoping we will have more of it. We fancy, however, that the pessimistic editorial writer of Saturday Night penned his criticism without due consideration of what his position involves, possibly through a willingness to sink his true sentiment in the not very creditable object of getting a knock at the Lord's day Alliance, for whom he appears to have a peculiar aversion. Whether his contention that the laws are unfairly administered in Canada is correct or not has nothing to do with the case in point. That the prosecutor fails to do his part is no excuse for a judge to refuse to penalize any crime that is proven before him.

Selling At Owen Sound

Owen Sound, Sept 18—Last night after an all-day session the case against Bert Howard, bartender at the Patterson House, was concluded and a fine of $100 imposed. Capt. John Corbett of the Royal was fined a like amount on a similar charge this morning. Howard was again fined a like amount on another charge, and a case against Reginald Clarkson, lesse of the Grand Central, is in progress. Earlier in the week James McArthur, lesse of the Patterson House bar, was convicted on two counts, paying fines of $100 on each. As undoubtedly the hotels pay these fines the Patterson House pays $400 this week, while the costs will be about $35. Clarkson, whose case is in progress, was defendant in a recent trial in which he stated that he had been washing off the labels from the local option beer bottles and selling the contents under a pretence of secrecy, thus leading his customers to believe they were drinking the straight lager. This device brought plenty of customers till the trial exposed the dodge. Provincial Inspector Ayearst and his men secured the evidence against Howard and Corbett, while License Inspector Matt. C. Beckett laid the charges against McArthur and Clarkson.

Bad Shelburne Boys

It has happened on more than one occasion during the past few years that the band room of the 36th regimental band has been entered in the night by unauthorized persons and the bass drum, cymbals and any other noise producers that were available taken out and a determined attempt made to make night hideous by combinations of strange sounds. Generally entrance has been made by means of duplicate keys, and this in spite of the fact that the pattern of lock on the door has been changed several times to prevent just such funny business. Monday night of this week the bandmaster saw to the locking of the door himself after practise. The two keys have not since been out of possession of the persons supposed to carry them, and they were not near the room on Tuesday. Yet in the early hours of Wednesday morning (about 1 a.m., to be precise) night was again made hideous by individuals who got into the bandroom, procured instruments, uniforms and torches, and held a bacchanalian street parade. It is time these people were prosecuted for disturbing the peace. If that doesn't stop their fool performances, perhaps a prosecution for breaking into military property will help.—Economist.

Making Room For Hosea

Dr. Edward Everett Hale was a foe to to long sermons. He used to tell a story of a long-winded preacher and the minor prophets, which the Washington Star reprints.

This preacher preached over an hour on the four greater prophets, and then, when his exhausted congregation thought he was through, he took a long breath, turned a fresh page, and leaning over the pulpit, said:

"We now come to the more complex question of the minor prophets. First let us assign to them their proper order. Where, brethren, shall we place Hosea?"

An irascible old gentleman in a back pew rose, took his hat and stick, and said, as he departed:

"Place him here if you want to. I'm going home.

Cut Head Off Corpse.

Toronto, Sept. 18—The action of Frank Anthony of 548 Adelaide street west, a local tinsmith, in opening the grave of his son-in-law, William Gray, at Orangeville, and having the head severed from the body, will be the basis of a criminal prosecution by the Orangeville authorities. Anthony was arrested in a foundry yesterday afternoon by Detective Tipton on a charge of "misconduct in respect to human remains," and handed over to County Constable Hughes of Orangeville. The officer took his prisoner back last evening.

The case is an unusual one, and centres in the death, over a year ago, of Gray. The dead man was, according to the police, a heavy drinker, and, having been placed on the "Indian list," was refused liquor at the hotels in the town. Some time before his death, it is said, he forced his way into Jeremiah Morrison's hotel, and when the proprietor attempted to put him out a fight resulted. Gray was ejected from the building after he had, according to the story of his relatives, been struck over the head by a hard rubber instrument in Morrison's hands. The incident was almost forgotten until some months later when Gray after a short illness died. His relatives then revived the story of the fight in the hotel and the alleged use of the piece of hard rubber, claiming that Gray's skull had been fractured by the blow, although the injury was not suspected at the time. County Crown Attorney MacKay, to determine whether there was any foundation for the story, held an inquest, but the jury after hearing the evidence brought in a verdict of death from natural causes.

Not content with this, Frank Anthony of Toronto, representing Gray's wife, brought an action in the courts against the hotel keeper, claiming damages for the death of Gray. The body was exhumed. The trial of the action was heard before a jury, County Crown Attorney Drayton of Toronto representing Morrison. The jury, after listening to physicians for both sides, found against the plaintiffs, and the presiding Judge refused permission to appeal. Still unwilling to accept defeat, Anthony announced his intention of asking the Court of Appeal to set aside the Judge's ruling, and for permission to have the action tried again. No decision has yet been given on this point.

Meanwhile Anthony had the body exhumed again, and severing the head from the trunk, brought it to Toronto, where it is now in charge of his lawyers. As his warrant for this action Anthony claims to have received an order from an Orangeville Justice of the Peace. Although the second disinterment took place some time ago, it was apparently kept a secret until the last few days.

Seeing by Telephone

To allow persons conversing by telephone to see one another is known to be the ultimate goal of those inventors to whose labour we are indebted for the evolution of telephotographic apparatus. As the problem did not so far admit of any practical solution, inventors have, in fact, been satisfied with transmitting, by wire, photographic pictures, diagrams, hand writing and the like. According to reports just received from Denmark, a satisfactory solution is now offered. In fact, two young Danes (the brothers Anderson) recently called at the offices Politiken, the well-known Copenhagen daily, in order to submit to the editor the principle of their idea, particulars of which cannot yet be given out. Unlike the Korn apparatus, optical transmisson, according to their scheme, is not effected by means of any material sensitive to light, such as selenium, nor is a picture produced by photographic or mechanical means as in all the apparatus so far suggested. Transmission, in fact, takes place simultaneously, so as to reproduce any objects situated at the sending station in their natural colors and motions, their dimensions, however, being reduced.

The apparatus is connected by a contact with the telephone wire, when the acoustic or optical currents can be thrown alternately through the line. The operator is thus able at will to show himself, or to bring before the eyes of the person at the other end any objects he may like to show him. As the apparatus, so far from being necessarily located immediately beside the telephone, can be used within a considerable range, provided the contact be obtained, the possibilities of this invention are obviously many. Further details will be awaited with interest.—Scientific American.

W. J. Henry, ex-county councillor of Kincardine, was coming in his auto with a party of four from Goderich, when his machine became stalled going up a steep hill. Two of the party got out when Mr. Henry started to back down the hill. The auto became unmanageable and shot over a 25-foot embankment. The other two in the auto jumped but Mr. Henry stuck to his machine, receiving two broken ribs besides being otherwise injured. The auto was not badly damaged.

Ben Kahbeje, an Indian from the Southampton reserve, rented a wheel and did not return it when promised. A warrant was sworn out and he was arrested. He was let go on suspended sentence on paying costs amounting to $16.46.

The fisheries inspector at Owen Sound has got busy recently and secured several convictions for illegal fishing and having fish in possession that were illegaly caught.

A curious sight was to be seen yesterday afternoon on Division St. opposite the Seldon House. A man was observed on the sidewalk holding a telephone receiver to his ear while his right hand had a grip on what appeared to be an ordinary wooden hoop. Although there were no wires visible he was evidently listening to some conversation, and inquiry revealed the fact that wireless telephony had arrived in Owen Sound. Experiments were being made with apparatus belonging to the Collins Wireless Telephone Company of Newark, New Jersey. Mr. John Sydney of this town, who is one of the agents of the Company was conducting the experiments. While Mr. Sydney was standing in a room in the hotel speaking into the transmitter the man on the street with the receiver at his ear could hear every word with marvellous distinctness. It was a wonderful experience, and was hailed as such by the numerous individuals who got hold of the receiver. Mr. Sydney is endeavoring to sell stock for the Collins Company. Demonstrations were first given in Canada at the Toronto Exhibition and Owen Sound is the second place in the Dominion to receive a demonstration of the powers of this latest achievement of mechanical science.

Last night there were thirty-three patients in the General and Marine Hospital, three more than there is really accommodation for. Thirteen of the inmates are suffering from a severe type of typhoid fever, and this is a most abnormal number in this district. Several of these patients have been working down on the wharves. The matron and nurses have their hands full, and have little or no time to obtain rest. It is to be hoped that this typhoid epidemic, the cause of which is puzzling the doctors, will be speedily stamped out.

Councillor J. L. Boyd of Sydenham received a painful injury on Tuesday afternoon. He was at work packing apples in his orchard when the end of a barrel came down on the last finger of his right hand. The finger was severed at the first joint.

On Thursday James Sargent went up to Arthur for a load of furniture for George Mutrie, who is moving to Grand Valley. When about opposite Geo. Parks'on the way home, walking beside the load, he was somewhat startled to see smoke coming rather thickly from the load, and he lost little time in bundling off the stuff. The fire was burning fiercely in a feather tick, and had taken hold of the dray floor very close to some hay. Hurrying to prevent it getting headway he burned his hands severely, but so intent was he in unloading the stuff that he felt no pain until the burning stuff was unloaded. In addition to the feather tick, a mirror was broken and a dresser blistered. The fire is supposed to have started from a spark from his pipe or a broken match at Arthur, and smouldered unnoticed until opposite Mr. Parks'. Jim has a very bad pair of hands, and will not do any work for some time. All the flesh on the left hand is burned and the right one is badly blistered.—Grand Valley Star.
