A Hen Yarn

Uncle Ike says While on the question of spring cleaning out of doors, let me put in a good word for our faithful friend, the hen. Shut up your hens to save them from the ill-will of your neighbors who are so short in the grain that they get angry if your hens take sun-baths in their flower beds, or scratch out the seed peas just after being planted. Why one should get angry when his neighbor's hens visits him, puzzles me. They always go back home to lay, appearing to know the bother it would be having to send home the eggs. One exception to this I remember well. In my bachelor days a good friend, a bachelor also, but a householder, had a neighbor's hen came over every day to get his crumbs. After a while she appeared with a brood of chickens which she carefully hatched and reared on his place, but in the fall when the chilly nights began she went home, leaving her full grown brood. He carefully considered the matter and decided the hen belonged to the neighbor, but the chickens did not. Wishing to be perfectly fair he decided to try one of the chickens, and if it were tough take that as evidence it belonged to the neighbor, but there wasn't a tough one in the whole flock.—Ex.
