ROMANTIC STORY ABOUT FRIED CHICKEN

Poultry, according to Mons. Thomas chef at a well known Montreal hotel provides one of the dishes most pleasing to the general taste and at least one recipe is surrounded by romance. This is the origin of fried chicken as told in the legion of "Poulet a la Marengo." On June 14, 1800, 139 years ago, Napoleon Bonaparte in one of his lightning strokes defeated the Austrians at Marengo, and in celebration of his victory invited his leading generals to dinner that evening.

Unfortunately the field kitchen had been unable to keep pace with the rapid advance, although Napoleon's chef, Dunant, had pressed forward in a light van. The van, however was not provisioned and Dunant was faced with an almost unsurmountable problem. Napoleon had said dinner, and dinner there would have to be. Dunant spied a farm house in the distance and at once dispatched two battle-scarred veterans of Napoleon's escort to see what they could find. The old soldiers were hard put to it but they managed to outflank two wandering chickens and gather a few tomatoes and a bunch of garlic. With these materials, Napoleon's chef had to uphold his reputation and comply with the imperial order.

The chickens were hastily killed, plucked, and cut into pieces. Meanwhile was being heated in a pan on an improvised stove, and in no time the pieces of chicken were browning and simmering. With a few drops of cognac sprinkled on top the pieces of chicken, the dinner was served and highly praised by Napoleon and his staff. Thus was instituted, "Poulet a la Marengo" or fried chicken.

The bright young thing came into room and smiled at her mother.

"Mother.", she said,, "I must have some money for a new dress. Will you ask daddy for it?"

"Ask him yourself dear," was her mother's reply. "You are getting married in a month's time and you must have some practice."

Hoofed mammals have no collarbones.

"Have you forgotten that five dollars you owe me?"

"Certainly not." Didn't you see me try to dodge into that doorway?"
