FACTS FOR THE PEOPLE—ENGLISH BLACK VS. RED AND MAROON RUBBERS. -It is but reasonable to suppose that after what has been written and said, here and elsewhere, concerning the bane-ful effects of the highly colored dental rubbers, people of common sense should investigate and inform themselves as to investigate and inform themselves as to the component parts of these compounds, but there appears still to be some who do not see the importance of taking these precautions. There is no earthly blessing more enjoyable than health, and those who possess and value it should, as one means of retaining the treasure, use due caution in their selection of a material as a plate for artificial teeth. Of all the preparations of rubber used in dentierry, black is now acknowledged, not only by the best dentists, but by all who are wearing dentures made of it, to be the only material of its class possessing the purity and strength necessary for a good dental plate.
