LET JUSTICE ALONE

A portion of the Owen Sound papers are apparently engaged in an attempt to arouse sympathy for Henry Love, the man who is under sentence of death at the county town for the brutal murder of his wife. In order to do this the methods of Detective Reburn are attacked very vigorously, and it has been stated that "they smack strongly of the Inquisition" Such statements as that are untrue and misleading. The confession was not "wrung" from the boy, who told his story to Detective Reburn without hesitation after he had once commenced. We believe Detective Reburn acted eminently fair with the boy in every respect. What the object of the press of the county town can be we can only surmise. The same source of supply informs us that "a wave of sympathy is sweeping over the community, especially around Ceylon, where Love was well known." Where such information could emanate is a conundrum. Had such been the case The Advance would have been first to publish it, but this "wave" is unobservable here. The press of the county town should not undertake to retry the case on its own responsibility, especially before any movement is made towards mitigation or reprieve in the direct locality where the accused is best known.

We have yet to find a man in this section who does not believe that the verdict was a just one or that the accused received as fair a trial as could possibly be given under British law.

Taking into consideration the horribly brutal nature of the crime, those in closest touch with the case feel that while capital punishment remains a tenet of British justice this crime demands the full penalty attached to such a crime. The man who could calmly butcher a woman is not a normal man, but a production only parallel to the beasts that rend each other and gorge on their own kind. Sentiment is out of the question when it comes to deciding the penalty to fit such a crime, and the community should be cautious how it condones or leniently treats the criminal.

The broader question of whether capital punishment should remain upon our statutes, or give place to life imprisonment, should not be entered into here. The elimination of capital punishment does not appear to be making much headway throughout the world. The Biblical verdict that "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed," appears to be accepted literally as authority for the legal destruction of him who slays.

The enormity and brutality of the crime under consideration call for justice, and no maudlin sentiment should be allowed to interfere with its course. To those who saw with their own startled eyes the horrible result of the crime, no such advise need be applied; to others, including the press of the county, we appeal in the hope that they will leave the matter wholly in the hands of the authorities and the Department of Justice, who are quite competent to deal with the matter without advice from those who appear to be desirous of interfering. The man who killed this little woman is certainly deserving of hanging if ever man was deserving. The jury said that Love is the the man. When the evidence is weighed by the Department of Justice that tribunal, which is final, will decide whether the jury was justified in bringing in such a verdict. Any attempt by the newspapers to create a fictitious sympathy and cast abroad false impressions, as we believe has been done, is most unseemly and ill-advised.

THE BURDEN OF BAD EGGS

A convention of produce dealers met in Toronto last week to discuss matters pertaining to their business. The egg question was the most prominent matter discussed and it was decided to ask the government for legislation covering the question of marketing malodorous eggs. The loss entailed on all hands by the careless handling and marketing of eggs in Canada is something enormous and it is felt that the time has arrived when something will have to be done to stem this waste.

Prof. Graham of the Ontario Agricultural College, has recently been studying the egg problem abroad, and has found that Denmark sells eggs in the Edinburg, Glasgow and London markets under guarantee. He also believes that the only satisfactory way of marketing eggs is under the co-operative system of marking and gathering. In this way the highest price is secured and good eggs are insured to the consumer. All inferior "fruit" can be traced to the producer, who is mulcted in a $5 fine if he attempts to do crooked work.

The burden of bad eggs is becoming too heavy to be borne in this country, and it does not all fall on the consumer. The producer has to bear his share in lower prices, and the dealer also suffers. Many more eggs would be consumed at certain seasons of the year were the consumer certain that he was buying fresh goods, but in Canada to-day the housewife knows that at least twenty per cent. of the eggs she buys are stale and unfit for boiling or for anything except household baking. As a consequence the egg is not as popular in the summer season as it ought to be, or as it would be under a proper mode of marketing. This state of affairs has been rzeognized for a long time and people have been at their wits end to find a remedy. The only remedy in sight is prompt marketing and marking of eggs by the producer.

To give an idea of the immense importance of this question and the interest that attaches thereto, we might remark that The Advance published about a year ago an article suggestive along the lines now advocated. This article was copied in the press from Newfoundland to Vancouver, showing conclusively the widespread interest that attaches to the question and the importance of the subject from an economic standpoint.
