Captured by British in Libya Campaign

By mid-December over 13,000 Axis prisoners captured by British and Imperial troops in the Libyan advance, had reached Cairo on their way to prison camps for the rest of the war. The re-capture of Bardia yielded 7,500 more, among them the German General Schmidt, the first German General to raise the white flag in this war. By January 7 the total was 25,000. The picture above shows German prisoners, escorted by Scottish troops and Egyptian police, marching through Cairo to the famous Citadel fortress.

A new use for surplus agricultural products may be in the offing. The United States Department of Agriculture chemists claim to have made good progress in converting wheat and corn into synthetic rubber.

Many Still Sleep

"No thanks!" I said, and continued on my way south.

Trafalgar Square was familiar to me, day or night. I turned down past a bombed church and an ambulance passed me in the darkness with its bell clanging, and stopped at the next corner. As I walked past, a lady on a stretcher was taken in the little door. The last time I had been past that corner, a friend had pointed to that same door. "That's where they took me the night I smashed up my car in the big blitz," he had said. That was the first time I had known he had been bombed.

I caught up to a very fat man at the next corner. He looked congenial.

"Is this the Strand?" I asked. I knew it was, but that might be an opening.

"It is that," he said, "though it's not like it used to be in the old days when it was so full of traffic that you couldn't cross it anywhere hereabouts."

He turned to me, "You're an American and don't remember it?"

I explained I was a Canadian.

"I knew it was one or the other," he said, evidently thinking there was no real difference.

On a beautiful night like that, it was natural to turn to the weather next.

"Last year," he said, "they came over every night, moon or no moon." (Hitler is never mentioned by name and the Germans seldom: it is 'he' or 'they.') "About half-past eight, it was. You could set your watch by it. One hundred and sixty-eight nights without a break. Hell, it was. But I'd rather be in London in a blitz than have to live anywhere else. No place like London! And I'll live here while they leave two houses standing. But there's the entrance to your hotel across the street, sir."

We parted and I edged my way carefully across the Strand, and passed through the revolving door into the bright lights.

If every one of Canada's new army of wage-earners saves more, the country's effort toward winning the war will be greatly helped.

Every dollar you save means more labour and materials freed for making the war goods so urgently needed.

These savings, lent to the country in the purchase of War Savings Certificates or Victory Loan Bonds—lent to intensify Canada's war effort—will bring victory—and peace—nearer.
