USED BAGS NEEDED, MUST BE RETURNED

Used bags made from all kinds of textiles that found numerous uses in households throughout the country, especially during the depression era, must now be returned for re-use, according to an order of War Time Prices and Trade Board. Shortage of materials caused by war demands, sources of supply no longer available, and shipping difficulties, will have to be met by re-use of the various types of bags. National salvage headquarters urges the earliest possible return to the trade of all available supplies in town and country homes.

Bags returned must be of sound and clean material. Cotton, heavy twill, jute and sisal are all included in the order, which makes it an offence to cut or destroy or use for any purpose any of these types.

If turned in to a local salvage committee, funds for war charities will result. Other sources to which returns may be made are dealers from whom goods in bags are purchased, or local salvage dealers. Scrap bagging should be salvaged. It's needed in the manufacture of roofing.
