TAKE THAT HOLIDAY

Not because the war is coming to an end but because it is not, Canadians at home should take their normal holidays this year.

This is a year when many sacrifices will be asked of those on the home front, a year when there will be tragic news from those overseas.

This prospect will temper any thoughtless inclination to unnecessary rest and relaxation. At the same time its realization should move Canadians at home to permit themselves vacations that are economical and necessary.

No one is going to do his job well by sacrificing his normal rest period to his own sense of importance. Even our most active soldiers and statesmen take time off for the rest they know is necessary for continuance of the pace at which they work.

The year promises to make a sterner call than ever on the sustained strength of body and nerve in the industrial and farming populations. That call cannot be met by worn out workers.

So plan your holiday this year within the mild war-time restrictions applying in Canada. Get away from everything for a couple of weeks in the summer or fall—even from shaving or housekeeping if you can—and build up the strength you will need later.

There's no need to spend money that should be saved. Advance planning of economies can make a vacation as cheap as staying at home. Pick your fishing or loafing spot now and enjoy looking forward to it.
