Woman's Missionary Convention

The annual convention of the Methodist Women's Missionary Society of the Owen Sound District was held in Dundalk on Friday when delegates numbering about 25 were present, representing various Auxiliaries of the district, including Circles and Mission Bands,

The morning session opened with devotional exercises led by Mrs. Bonnell of Owen Sound. The minutes of last meeting were read and confirmed. After an address of welcome by Mrs. (Rev.) Waugh the reports of Auxiliaries were read. Miss Roche of Markdale Circle gave an interesting paper on "The King's Highway," a book used by many of the Auxiliaries and found to be of great help and inspiration. Further reports were given of work accomplished by First Church Owen Sound, Markdale, Westside, Harkaway, Dundalk, Flesherton, including the Mission Band of the latter place represented by Masters Wesley Armstrong and Frank Thurston. Dundalk reported the loss of an esteemed member through the hand of death. Through her zeal for missions this member requested near her closing hours that no flowers be placed upon her casket but that the money which might be spent in this way be given to the missionary cause. "Doing our bit" was the subject of a paper read by Mrs. (Rev.) Waugh. In response to an appeal for assistance to Mr. Niddrie in connection with his work at Island Lake, each Auxiliary was urged to forward parcels of clothing to Markdale for shipment from that point. The following resolution committee was appointed: Mrs. Bonnell, Owen Sound; Mrs. Armstrong, Flesherton; Mrs. Clarke, Harkaway; Mrs. Irwin, Markdale.

The afternoon session opened at two o'clock with prayer by Rev. W. Wallace of Markdale. Kimberley, Rocklyn and Markdale Mission Bands reported progress during the year. The junior choir of Dundalk Church rendered a selection. An instructive paper was given by Mrs. Cook, of Markdale, the District organizer "How to Win and Keep Members", was the subject of a helpful paper given by Miss Lynetta Hanbury, of Dundalk Circle. In connection with impressing upon the people the importance of the work of missionery organizations and enlisting further help it was deemed advisable to have the services of one Sunday in the year devoted to this particular purpose with the co-operation of the pastor of each Circuit. Mrs. (Rev.) Dudgeon, of Flesherton, gave a paper entitled "The Influence of the Holy Spirit on the Auxiliaries". This was followed by a patriotic vocal solo by Miss Nellie Gardiner and a chorus by the junior choir. Mrs. Cook was reappointed organizer and Mrs. J. H. Rutherford, of Owen Sound, Sec.-Treas. No place was decided on for next convention. Resolutions of sympathy were expressed to Mrs. Wilmot, President, in the loss of her husband, Dr. Wilmott, to Mrs. Rutherford, of Owen Sound, in her illness, to Westside and Dundalk Auxiliaries in the loss each of a member by death in the year.

The thanks of the convention were tendered to the local organizations who entertained the visiting delegates. Both dinner and tea were served in the church basement.

The address of Rev. Jas. Dudgeon, of Flesherton, in the evening from the text: "But the annointing which ye have received of him abideth in you" (1 John 2: 27), related to the inspiration gained in the convention and the spiritual uplift which would be carried home to the auxiliaries by the delegates. It was a fitting word in closing a successful missionery convention.—Herald.

Another Analyst Puzzled

Some time ago Dr. T. S. Sproule submitted a sample of the Karstedt oil to the Dominion Analyst, Dr. Eugene Haanel, of Ottawa, for analysis, and after a test by him the nature of this oil remains as big a mystery as ever. Following is a copy of the letter which accompanied the report:

Ottawa, October 20th, 1915.

Dear Sir,—I enclose a report of a test made on the sample of oil from Flesherton, Grey Co., Ont.

It appears impossible to determine whether this is a crude or a refined oil; the absence of low boiling constituents and of unpleasant odours indicates a refined product, but refined oils ordinarily do not leave such a large residue on distillation.

If the sample is suspected of being leakage from neighbouring oil reservoirs, it might be helpful to have a sample of this oil sent for analysis and comparison.

I am, Yours very truly, Eugene Haanel, Director.

In writing Mr. Karstedt Dr. Sproule says in part:

"I herewith enclose for your perusal letter and report received from Dr. Eugene Haanel, regarding the samples of oil I got from you and submitted it to him direct. From the conversation I had with him about it I concluded it would be an easy matter for them to analyse it, and tell without doubt whether it was crude oil or refined oil mixed with other products, so he gave me to understand, at least, but in this I was mistaken, as his letter shows. When discussing it he seemed to think it was refined oil mixed with other ingredients, and most probably was from the soakage from the place where other oils had been kept, but in his letter he makes little reference to that. From his report it would appear that they applied the same test, as was used by the Toronto chemist, that of evaporation at different degrees of heat."

CANADA'S KIPLING.

How Service Passed From the Role of Tramp to That of Poet.

London Tit-Bits has the following article on Robert Service, the Canadian poet:

The name of Robert W. Service is to Canada what that of Kipling is to the rest of the world. He is the poet whose "Songs of a Sourdough" present a picture of life "out West" more vivid, definite, and truthful than anything which has yet been written, and his career provides an equally striking story.

"At twenty-one, to the horror of my parents, I kicked over the traces and precipitated myself violently into the wild West." That is how Mr. Service himself relates his migration to Canada, which occurred after he had spent some years as clerk in a bank in Glasgow. "Having reached years of indiscretion," he says, "the routine of the office began to pall upon me. I seemed to see my life an endless vista of drab days, and myself growing bald and paunchy in a halo of respectability. I rebelled. I wanted color, action, change, excitement, with the thrill of not knowing what was round the corner."

And Mr. Service got it; for, after traveling steerage as an emigrant, he landed in Vancouver with exactly five dollars in his pocket, and had to start work by picking stones off the surface of a field destined for turnips. Tree-chopping, farming, school-teaching, newspaper reporting, Indian trading, and various other miscellaneous occupations followed before the Kipling of Canada came to the conclusion that his parents were right and that the work of a bank clerk was his forte.

"I was tired," he says, "of being kicked about from pillar to post, and once more I sought a situation in a bank. I was tamed down, and then I had a stroke of luck that changed my whole destiny. For at the height of the gold rush I was sent to the Yukon by the bank which employed me, and remained there for eight years. The extraordinary virility and color of the life made a great impression on me, and it was during the solitary walks I used to take as a cure for dyspepsia that I first began to write.

"I had read so many stories of the North, and I had read so much Kipling that I began, out of sheer boredom, to versify, Kipling fashion."

Mr. Service, however, thought so little of his work at that time that the verses which emanated from his pen were thrown into the bottom of trunk, and lay there for some time. One lucky day, however, he came across them and read them to a friend. This friend thought "they weren't so bad for an amateur," and suggested that Mr. Service should have some of them printed and hand them round to his friends as a Christmas card.

"This, however, struck me as rather foolish," he says, "and happening to receive a bonus of one hundred dollars, I took the plunge, sent my verses to a publisher, and told him to go ahead and print them at my expense."

The rest, according to Mr. Service, reads like a fairy story, for the publisher was so impressed with the merit of the verses that he insisted on publishing them on a royalty basis, and before Mr. Service realized what a genius he was his verses had reached the seventh edition, and they have been selling ever since.
