Sorry Susie!

but the reason you can't talk over your toy telephone is because there's lots more to telephoning than the instrument itself. It takes wire and cable and complicated exchange equipment and a mass of other apparatus to link one telephone with the million other telephones which make up the Bell system. These telephone materials have been going to war. That's why so many people are waiting for telephone service today.

It will take time and money and manpower to carry out the large-scale construction and improvement program we've planned for after the war.

Take our dial conversion program alone: Almost three-quarters of the telephones in service are now of the dial type. But that still leaves thousands of telephones and exchange equipment in scores of communities, to be changed over.

After the war when equipment is again obtainable, the job will take years to complete. And this is just one of several projects which spell jobs not only for all our present employees both at home and overseas but for additional workers, too.

EGGS

Sorry to say that the quality of eggs we are now receiving is not near what it should be. There are far too many "B" grade eggs — placed in this grade on account of heavy yolks. There are several causes of heavy yolks: one being exposure of eggs to warm temperature — and another, hens being let out while still hungry, filling up on grass and anything else they may find.

In order to overcome these obstacles, we strongly urge producers to follow these suggestions:

1. Avoid letting hens out if possible. If you let them out, feed them well in the forenoon and let them run for a short time, only, in the afternoon.
2. Gathe eggs at least twice a day and place in wire basket or open-sided container to allow for air circulation.
3. Keep eggs in a cool place.
4. sMarket at least twice a week.
