THE RAEMAKERS CARTOONS

The Advance has to thank Sir Robert Borden for several copies of a pamphlet containing copies of forty Raemakers war cartoons. For a horrible arraignment of German crimes against civilization these cartoons excel anything that it is possible to describe with a pen. A copy of these cartoons should be in possession of every man and child living in the world to-day. The pictures are not overdrawn, but represent actual events as proved time and again by commissions of investigation. With a copy in your possession one can form a better conception of the devilish cruelty of German crimes than he could by reading all the literature ever printed on the subject. Take one or two pictures as a sample: One is entitled "The Children of the Lusitania." This picture shows the mourning parents and dead infants laid out in rows. There is aquotation from the Berlin Lokalanzeiger which says, "We do not want any love among the Americans, but we do want respect, and the case of the Lusitania will win it for us better than a hundred victories on land" Germany appears to interpret the word fear as "respect." A few of the most telling cartoons are entitled "The massacre at Aershot," "Justification," "The spoils of war," "The Belgian massacre" and "The shields at Rosselaire," where the German fiends used civilians as a shield to protect their troops. The last cartoon shows a prisoner behind the bars while Brittania whispers words of hope through the grating in the words of Mr. Asquith: "We shall never sheathe the sword which we have not lightly drawn until Belgium recovers in full measure all and more than all that she has sacrificed." These words ring down the world to-day, and only when taken in conjunction with the wonderful Raemaker set of pictures, a combination of sight and hearing, can the full import of these words be thoroughly appreciated. The consumation of this great aim is what our boys are fighting and dying for. It means a terrible sacrifice, but no more holy sacrifice was ever made since the days of Abraham.

The Kyte charges against Sir Sam Hughes and the shell committee have been disproved. They are honest men and did their work honestly and in the best interests of the country. It would have been a sad commentary on the loyalty of this country had it been otherwise. But Col. Allison is not in the same category, and it will be interesting to note whether Sir Sam will still stand by his friend—that friend who was not averse to adding another million to his wealth out of the agony of Canada. It was a paying friendship—for Allison—and the loss of his commission as "Col." will probably not bother him as much as would the loss of his rake-off.

Up to time of writing the Deutchland has not sailed for home. We are told that the captain and crew are praying, and asking their friends to pray, that they may be vouchsafed a safe journey to Limburgerland, It would be more to the point if these prayers were addressed to the British navy. The commander has advertised for American citizen passengers, doubtless with the idea that Britain would not dare molest them if there were American citizens on board Steel nets are, however, no respector of persons, and if American citizens wish to dare the net infested regions it will literally be their own funeral should they fail to come up.

An article printed elsewhere in this issue entitled "The Part of Canada," is well worth reading, showing, as it does, that the foreign press of the better class appreciates our work, while marvelling at its magnitude. Truly in the words of the writer, "uncomplainingly, even proudly, Canada is bearing its share of the burdens."

The Part of Canada

The British people have had to face a good many disappointments and disasters during the course of the war, although no more perhaps than might have been expected in view of the early inadequacy of their military establishment for such a struggle as they found themselves engaged in. But they have had compensations in the proof that the self-governing dominions and dependencies have given of the solidarity and loyalty of the British Empire. The response that South Africa Australia, New Zealand and Canada made to the call of the mother country was more prompt and generous than the enemies of Britain had believed possible. "What did the English say to induce the Canadians to fight for them?" a German officer asked a Canadian prisoner. He had been misled by the virtual independence of the great British colonies into thinking that their devotion to the distant home of their ancestors was not deep enough to draw them into a great war—especially a war sprung from remote causes after hurried preliminaries in which the colonies had no voice.

Canada has already enrolled a quarter of a million men and has promised to enlist as many more. Nearly a hundred thousand have already gone to the front in France and Flanders, and from Ypres to Arras their blood has been poured out in the cause of Britain. Like all the colonial troops, they have won a great reputation for courage, for steadfastness and for a certain high spirit and personal initiative that are especially valuable in the monotonous and depressing warfare of the trenches.

The recruits have come from all classes of the population, for, although the Nationalists—a party of French Canadians who are for the independence of Canada and against its closer connection with the empire—have been lukewarm, the French as a whole have been almost as ready to enlist as their English speaking fellow citizens.

Without any trouble whatever the Dominion has raised more than one hundred and fifty million dollars for war expenses, and nearly or quite twenty million dollars in charity and relief funds. When the first war loan of fifty million dollars was advertised, it was believed that the greater part would have to come from the banking house, but the public subscribed at once twice the entire amount.

More unprepared than either England or the United States for actual warfare, Canada, under the direction of Gen Sam Hughes, equipped its army promptly and well, and provided a supply of munitions that is constantly increasing. In spite of the serious dearth in its young manhood, it is raising a great part of the food supply of Great Britain.

Uncomplainingly, even proudly, Canada is bearing its share of the burden. It is true that its statesmen, taught by the experience of the last two years, have declared that in the future a way must be found to give the self governing dominions a voice in questions of imperial policy; but to that all Englishmen are quite ready to agree. The colonies have deserved whatever they may ask at the hands of the mother country.—Youth's Companion.

What a Gobbler Did

A very amusing and interesting story of the barn yard, or rather the poultry yard, come from Lochalsh way. Herb Ensign, a farmer there, has a freak gobbler, or rather a gobbler with freakish ways. As is well known, the turkey cock usually is content to spend the summer days spreading his colors to the sun and strutting about as if undisputed king of the barn yard. But this one of Mr. Ensign's has gone on another tangent. From playing king of the barn yard he suddenly developed an ambition to become an old clucking hen, and a month ago gave unmistakable evidence that he wanted to sit on eggs. Having none of his own, he took a sitting hen by the head and pulling her from the nest, took her place on the eggs. Mr. Ensign fearing that the change might mean death for the expected chickens, prepared another nest with eggs and placed the gobbler on it. Strange to say, he took to the new nest with every evidence of satisfaction, leaving it occasionally for a hurried meal. Last week the gobbler's chickens made their appearance—five of them; and our informant says he looks after them like any old mother hen.

The above story, the truth of which can be verified by a visit to Mr. Ensign's barn yard, where the gobbler and chickens are cooped together, is remarkable, for the usual temper and disposition of the gobbler is the very opposite of the mother hen. It almost looks as though the government campaign for Production and Thrift had in some way affected the brain of this proud bird.—Lucknow Sentinel.

Empire Federation Spectacle At C. N. E.

This will be "Federation Year" at the Canadian National Exhibition and everything has been planned to symbolize Imperial unity and power, the new bonds of Empire brotherhood welded in the crucible of War on distant battlefields. In keeping with the significance of the event plans have been laid for a Spectacle of unusual beauty and brilliance, a superb, satisfying simile of Empire might and cohesion. Over 1,200 performers will be required and they will include soldiers representing all parts of the British domains the world around, from the lathy, dignified Sikh and the big black chiefs of Somaliland to His Majesty's own Brigade of Guards. The pageant will be enacted before a 700 foot reproduction of the British Houses of Parliament, the War Office and Westminster Abbey, all constructed with a wealth and truth of detail such as to almost convince onlookers who have been there that they are back in the "Heart of the Empire."
