The annual district meeting of the Owen Sound District will be held in Owen Sound on Sept. 28.

Mr.Jos. Field wishes us to thank those who helped to save his property at the recent Richardson fire.

Conover Cheese Factory made a shipment of 13,965 lbs. of cheese. The price realized was 17½ and 18¼c per lb.

Miss Andrew, milliner, of Shelburne, was the guest of Mrs. W. J. Bellamy for a few days during the past week.

Get an East Grey prize list from the secretary, W. A. Hawken, and make up a list of exhibits. The time is short.

Miss Fewster of Granton, the new milliner employed in F. H.W.Hickling's millinery parlors, arrived last week to take charge.

Mr. Charles Hopper of New Liskeard, called on The Advance Tuesday. He has been a resident of New Liskeard for the past twelve years.

Shelburne dogs, which have been tied up on account of the rabies scare, are now allowed to run at large again. They were allowed at liberty on Sept. 1.

Geo. Lees, proprietor of the Lucknow Woollen Mill, was found in a bush on the outskirts of that town with his throat cut by a razor, on Thursday, the 24th ult., apparently a case of suicide.

Passengers by Saturday night train had a weary wait owing to an accident to the Teeswater train. A coupling pulled out, derailing the tender. It was after two o'clock when the train arrived at this station.

Brer Irwin of the Durham Chronicle in a short writeup of the Toronto exhibition, says: Has Canada, with all her apparent indifference, a reverence for sacred things? Are Canadians at heart a truly loyal and religious people ? To see every individual of the ten or fifteen thousand on the grand stand rise up as one man when the doxology, led by the cathedral choir of old Westminster was sung, is a sight to be long remembered.

At the regular meeting of Prince Arthur Lodge on Friday evening last a resolution of condolence was adopted extending the sympathy of the lodge to Very Worshipful Bro. M. K. Richardson in his bereavement by the death of his esteemed wife. Degrees were conferred on three members, two of whom are at Camp Borden and expect to go overseas soon. The lodge has eight members in khaki.

The frame residence owned by John Richardson, just outside the corporation, was burned to the ground on Thursday last. Mr. Richardson was alone at the time, his wife being on a visit to friends at Walkerton. He put on a fire to get dinner and went to the spring for a pail of water. While absent the roof caught fire. Most of the stuff downstairs was saved. There was an insurance of $700 on building and contents.

The 147th Battalion boys were all home on a four day leave of absence from Friday until Tuesday. The battalion came up from Borden by special train of thirteen coaches, arriving here about 6 p.m. They were a wet looking bunch when they arrived, a heavy rainstorm having passed over as they were marching to entrain and soaking them to the skin and on down into their boots. There were some funny scenes on that train owing to the endeavors to dry up cloathing by hanging it out windows, wringing it out, etc. and so forth.

Miss Roome of Proton is the guest of Mrs. Ab. Stewart.

Remember the quilting in the Methodist Church today, Thursday; lunch will be served at the close.

Springhill Red Cross society have sent a box of clothing to the fire sufferers in the north. This box was collected for the Serbians but owing to the fact that passage could not be secured it was donated to the fire sufferers.

Somebody left a good pair of boots at the barber shop some time ago. They have been carefully kept for the owner, who has never called for them. If the owner does not soon call and get his property they will be sold.

The new Canadian war loan for one hundred million is now on the market This is one of the safest investment possible and any person with spare cash on hand cannot do better than help along the cause by buying some of these bonds. Read the official advertisement in another column for full particulars.

The high school board this year offered four medals to the pupils attaining highest marks in the Entrance examination and the three forms in the high school. The successful Entrance pupil was Katharine McVicar; first form to second, Pearl Allen; second to third, Ruth Hargrave; and Normal Entrance, Ina Laidlaw.

The fishing season closing on Sept. 15 has been a very satisfactory one to the sports of this district, who have made some phenomenal catches in the old Beaver. The trout appear to thrive wonderfully well on the new feeding beds formed by the hydro development, and seventeen inch trout were quite common in the catches this summer. The Advance has to thank Mr. R. Clark of Rock Mills, an expert with line and rod, for three 12-inch and one 13-inch trout—royal beauties—captured with others last week.

At the monthly meeting of the W.M.S. and Ladies' Aid of Chalmer's church held at the Manse last week the former packed their annual bale of quilts and clothing, (value $30,) to be sent through the Presbyterial to one of the missions in the Northwest. The Ladies' Aid voted a contribution of $20 to the needy Presbyterian congregation at Matheson, New Ontario, which suffered the loss of their church and Manse by the recent forest fires. Five dollars also given towards replenishing the minister's library, which, together with his other belongings, was destroyed. The ladies resolved to hold a sewing bee at the church on Wednesday afternoon this week to prepare clothing, etc., for other needy sufferers by the fire. Mrs. McVicar served refreshments and a pleasant social time was spent.

The Late H. H. Miller

[From The Hanover Post.]

"Mr. Miller has gone!"

These few words as they sped swiftly around town on Monday morning caused probably more general regret and sadness than has been occasioned by the passing of any other citizen since Hanover was a town. To those who had seen him only a few days before walking in his accustomed brisk way around town, the announcement of his death seemed almost incredible. While never a very robust looking man, yet his nervous energy and virile, wiry constitution were such that he was probably the last man in town one would expect to pass so quickly. H. H. Miller was known by everyone in Hanover, probably by nearly everyone in the district and to quite an extent throughout Ontario and Canada, but no one outside of his native town knows just how much he will be missed here—and while it is said that everyone's place can be filled—yet at this distance it seems as though it will be a long, long while before H. H. Miller's place will be filled in this town in the public spirited, aggressive, courageous, open-handed and affectionate way that he filled it.

He took suddenly ill on Tuesday afternoon, and while suffering considerable pain acted as a pall bearer for the late Mr. George Hollinger. After the funeral he went home and went to bed, and that night suffered greatly, the cause being obstruction of the bowel. An operation was decided upon and took place on Thursday night, Dr. Cotton of Toronto performed the operation, assisted by Dr. Tayor of Hanover and Dr. Hall of Walkerton. The operation was apparently successful, but he did not have sufficient vitality to pull through. Mr. Miller's death was probably due to overwork. We understand that the operation, while of a serious nature, was not generally fatal in a man of normal health and strength. Mr. Miller was a man careful in his habits and frugal in his tastes, but he had one mania—work; his passion for wanting to keep his fingers on all the keys continually would seem to have been his undoing. He had a large office business and was entrusted with the affairs of many people; many of his clients were widows whose affairs he gave a particularly personal attention to. And then there was politics. In a close riding everything counted, and he was at the beck and call of everybody. Between business and politics he had used up all his reserve energy, and in a critical time his heart wasn't strong enough to stand the strain. While after the operation the best results were hoped for, it was seen Sunday night that he was sinking, and at 10 o'clock on Monday morning he "crossed the bar."

Deceased was born on Jan. 10, 1861, in Owen Sound, and was the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Miller, His father still resides at Owen Sound at the age of 80 years. He came to Hanover with Mrs. Miller in Jan. 1884 shortly after their marriage. Of splendid mental ability, his advice was sought by clients from the whole district, and while he never had a lawyer's training his wide reading and experience enabled him to give advice and straighten out tangles that would otherwise have gone to lawyers. As he prospered he invested a great deal of his money in local industrial enterprises. In this way there was really no better citizen than Miller. He was a director and shareholder of The Knechtel Furniture Co., The Spiesz Furniture Co., The Knechtel Kitchen Cabinet Co., and other local concerns. He also held a large amount of western farm lands, besides other securities, and was easily one of Hanover's wealthiest citizens.

He had a natural acumen for public life, and while quite young he began to take a keen and active interest in politics. He was a Liberal and strong party man always. He was a great reader, and developed early in life the art of public speaking While he hadn't the voice and temperament of an orator, he had a remarkable facility of speech, a great readiness at repartee and acute reasoning powers that made him a power on the platform and he was much sought after as a speaker for political, religious and social affairs. He "stumped" the riding of South Grey with the late Senator Landerkin through several campaigns, and while still young was looked upon as Dr. Landerkin's ablest lieutenant. After Dr. Landerkin's death he received the Liberal nomination in South Grey, and in 1904 he defeated by a good margin Mr. Charles McKinnon of Durham for the Federal House. The Conservatives realizing that their best chance to defeat Mr. Miller lay in splitting the Hanover vote, in 1908 brought out Mr. R. J. Ball who had been before the public in a municipal capacity for some years. The contest was a keen one and Mr. Miller was again elected, though not by a very large majority. In 1911 Miller and Ball were again opponents, and this time Ball captured the riding, also by a small majority. At the time of his death Mr. Miller was again the candidate for the next general election, and a gallant fight was looked for. While a member of the House of Commons Mr. Miller was the same indefatigable worker that he was in his private business, and he was close in appreciation and regard to his leader, Sir Wilfred Laurier. He was spoken of many times for Cabinet preferment, and had the Laurier Government and Miller retained power no doubt sooner or later his claims would have been recognized. The Miller racing bill which limits race meets to two weeks was one of the tangible results of his presence in the House.

The late Mr. Miller was a real sportsman in the fairness of his outlook upon life—but he was no "sport." Athletics, racing, fishing or motoring had no attraction for him. His one diversion from the steady grind of the office was farming and the love of horses. The finest motor car did not appeal to him like a horse, and though he drove a car in connection with electioneering, he used it to get to a given place in a hurry. In fact the story is told that he took so little interest in motors and how to run them that his friends never felt safe in driving with him. He was fond of a saddle horse and enjoyed nothing better than a canter through the country.

The late Mr. Miller was an astute business man, and a strong believer in advertising both in his business life and his political life. But there was one kind of advertising that he never indulged in and that was his charities. No kinder heart ever beat in the breast of a Hanoverian than beat in the late Henry Horton Miller. Many a poor man and woman here, and many little kiddies who would otherwise have gone without, received help and good things from him and in many cases the recipients never knew who the donor was.

Deceased leaves to mourn his death : his wife, one daughter, Mrs. W.E. Adams of Kelowna, B. C., and two sons, Moore A., barrister of Weyburn, Sask., and Fraser with the Princess Pats regiment now serving in France. He also leaves his father and sister, Mrs. W. F. Gray, at Owen Sound, and four brothers, Geo. J. of Chicago, Major R. Boyd of Washington, D. C., E. S. of Regina, and Dr. Hugh of South Bend, Ind.
