Prosperity Based On Production

Few dispute that our prosperity is based on our production of goods and services which, it is estimated, will be more than twelve billion dollars this year - higher than the peak of war-time production. Our debts to other countries are 35% lower than before the war and in 1946 our sales to the world were greater than our purchases. Can this high level of production and sales - which means a high level of employment be maintained. Informed observers claim that Canadian purchasing power and a large part of the big expansion of industry can continue only if our sales to other countries is maintained. If this is correct it is clear that the interest Canadians have been taking in the Moscow conference of foreign ministers and in Geneva conference on international trade is overwhelmingly justified even on the bases of our own self inerest, because without a settlement of the European problem and an agreement to lower all barriers to trade, the basis of our present prosperity will be substantially reduced.
