Here as in other parts of the country there was little damage done Halloween night. Police answered a couple calls to check up on pranksters. Some costly damage was done to steps on Wellington St. near the public school. A neighbor has suggested that parents might help in overcoming such destruction by using a strap on such thoughtless children.

Friends were shocked to learn of the sudden passing Saturday morning at Rochester, N.Y., of William H. Calver, aged 51, son of Mrs. George Barton, Liberty Street, who died on the golf course, having just completed an 18-hole game. Further particulars of his passing and an obituary will be published next week. Relatives from here attending the funeral in Rochester on Tuesday were Mr. and Mrs. Frank Calver, Madeline and Florence, Mrs. Muriel Dunn, Stanley and Jack.

Hunting News! "The Big Four" deer, moose and rabbit hunters of Bowmanville are at it again. Sunday, Bill Caverly, J.P., Clinton Caverly, Virginitown, Provincial Constable Rex Caverly, Simcoe, and inveterate sportsman Bill Bagnell left for their hunting lodge in the Apsley district. By next week it will probably be known whether the frequent boasts about accurate shooting heard from these nimrods were in vain. Also in the party this year were five others including a party of Americans who come annually for the sport.

F. W. Tamblin and J. D. Brown attended the 56th Breeders' Sale at Stratford on Oct. 30th. John Mills, Hampton, is another Darlington farmer, who is growing "super" vegetables this year. A giant carrot he brought to town the other day allegedly developed from the microscopic seed purchased at a local seed store. It tipped the scales at three pounds five ounces, measured 11 1/2 inches high and stretched the tape for 14 inches in circumference.

Compulsory Service

It is well that the Government delayed no longer in tackling this problem of inflation. The pace was quickening and the writing on the wall was plain for all to read. We are all aboard a boat travelling on uncharted seas, but, nevertheless, the Government is to be congratulated upon the scope of the measures taken and upon the courage it has displayed.

I was in Germany a few years ago when the Nazi government began experimenting with wage and price ceilings, but circumstances there were very different in that wages and prices were reasonably stable and the country was not at war.

Economic Dictatorship It is a bold experiment upon which we are embarked, and it would be easy for any of us to point out loopholes in the present plan; but it is better for us by far that we should settle down to the realization that strong treatment was imperative; that we cannot fight a total war with half measures; and that if we are to be successful in meeting the greatest challenge which has ever been hurled at the British race, we shall have to be willing to make these sacrifices, and a lot more before we are through.

After all, it is largely a choice between economic dictatorship and economic chaos, and so far as I am concerned, I prefer the former. Difficult as the job may be, I would rather face the task of ridding ourselves of the war is ridding ourselves of Hitler, and I am afraid that this is just about what the alternative is.

The application of these policies in Canada, a time when the spiral of inflation is well under way, will carry with it many hardships and severe losses to individuals and businesses generally, and yet each one of us will have to steel himself to accept them with forbearance, in the knowledge that if too many exceptions are made, the very purpose of this legislation would be defeated, and with the realization also that the alternative to these measures is inflation.

Leaders Must Choose It is a pretty fair assumption that when once this war is won, the process of returning to our democratic systems will be a slow one, and that for a long time to come, great economic powers will be centred in the hands of the Dominion Government.

The choice of our leaders will be a more serious matter in the future than it has ever been in the past, and it would be well for each one of us to realize and ponder his grave responsibility as an elector.

The voluntary system of enlistment produced more men in the early stages of the war, until fairly recently, than the three fighting services could absorb, and all of us will remember the long waiting list of impatient men, anxious to serve their country, but who could not be immediately accepted by the Army, the Navy or the Air Force, owing to the lack of housing, clothing, equipment or training facilities.

To have rushed into conscription in those early days, would, to my mind, have slowed up our industrial and economic effort, without adding to the strength or effectiveness of our fighting forces.

Industry has proven its ability to maintain, and in fact, greatly increase its production, notwithstanding the inroads made upon its personnel by the mobilization of young men for home defense. It seems to me that the time has come when the final step should be taken without which a full national effort cannot be made—the enforcement of compulsory selective service.

Total Effort Needed We are all agreed that Canada should throw her whole weight into this conflict. We are agreed that vital as equipment is, it is manpower, well-equipped and well-trained manpower, that will ultimately play the decisive part, and that, as our Prime Minister, so eloquently put it in a recent speech when referring to the Prussian military machine: "It is the most powerful engine of destruction this world has known. It is a dragon that can only be slain by fighting men!" To defeat the Axis powers, to lay low this dragon, we know that every ounce of our strength will be required, and that nothing short of the complete dedication of our wealth, our energies and our manpower to the common cause will bring us ultimate victory.

We are committed, therefore, by the will of the people of this country, and by our oft repeated statements, to a 100% effort, and I am sure that there are but few men in this room tonight, or few men throughout this country, who in their hearts do not know full well that a total effort cannot be made short of selective compulsory service.

Do any of us believe that the German fighting machine, or her wartime production would be what it is today if only those who wished to do so took part? Are we thinking constructively when we hope to meet this all-out effort by relying upon the hazards of voluntary enlistment and voluntary service?

Conscription Must Come The principle of conscription has been recognized by our Government in the mobilization of our economic resources, in the control of our industrial structure, in the levying of high taxation on income, in the control of our currency, in the limitation of our travel to the confines of our own frontiers, and, more recently, in the freezing of price and wage levels. Why should this principle not be extended to the most vital of all our assets, to the greatest contributing factor in this war—our manpower? There are moral values to selective compulsory service besides the more practical ones, and it would be difficult to over-estimate their importance. This method of serving is entirely fair. It preserves the essential principle upon which this war is being fought—that of equality of sacrifice. The bringing in of this measure would be a practical demonstration of this country's determined resolve to let nothing stand in the way of its all-out effort. Such an example would have a powerful influence on this great North American continent, out of whose total population of about 140,000,000, we represent but 11,000,000. Now we come to the crucial point in this whole question. The statement has often been made that while the advantage of selective compulsory service as such is recognized, its application would be opposed by important groups in this country, and particularly by French-speaking Canadians, and that, in consequence, its application would endanger the unity and impetus of our war effort. This may have been an accurate view of the situation as it existed in the early days of the war—or even six or twelve months ago—but today, when the full realization of the issues at stake has sunk deep into the soul of every Canadian, it is my strong conviction that no longer truly reflects the position. Unthinkable defeat would so twist, warp and torture our individual lives; the issues are so fundamental; the things we are fighting for and the cause we are defending, are of such vital, immediate and personal importance to every Canadian, that it seems to me that the chance of our ancestry has no bearing upon this problem.

Quebec Won't Object I, who was born in France and spent my childhood among French people and who, since coming to this country, have learned to understand, respect and admire our French-speaking fellow Canadians, can tell you that, faced with the mass shooting of innocent hostages, I doubt if there is a man or woman today with French blood flowing through his veins whose soul is not tortured by the martyrdom of invaded France and whose spirit is not fired by a determination to have done once and for all with such fiendish tyranny—yes, and to exert every effort while there is still time to ward off such tragedies from our own shores.

Further more, I can say to you without danger of contradiction that under the inspiring leadership of Premier Godbout, the French-speaking Canadians are just as interested in the issues of this war as you and I, and just as ready to defend them.

Pledges Now Spurious In discussing this question tonight, I am not unmindful of the pledges given during the last election by the Government and the Opposition. But the people of this country are no longer interested in these pledges. They are realistic enough to appreciate that, although honestly given, these pledges were made in other days—the days of the Maginot Line; of France, our strong and trusted ally; the days of the war of attrition; of the "phony war" as some called it. No, the people of Canada are not interested in pledges given under such widely dissimilar circumstances. What they are interested in—and that with all their heart and soul—is winning this war.
