On Monday afternoon en airplane carrying two officers landed in A. C. McDonnell's field next the school lot. In attempting to rise an hour later the soft soil prevented them from getting up enough speed (there being little wind) and they collided with a rail fence. The plane turned turtle and the aviators scrambled out uninjured. The propeller and wings were badly damaged. A motor truck from Camp Borden carried away the dismantled plane the following day. Another plane landed on Tuesday in the same field after giving a thrilling exhibition of coming down from a high altitude by loops, slide and nose dive. Around Grey County

A large number of Grey men have returned in the latest batch of wounded and furloughed soldiers.

Not until the Hun is hammered into submission, not until peace is declared, and commerce resumes its wonted way, can we let up for a minute.

Struck in Shell Hole

The following letter has been received from a chum by a sister of Pte. Wesley Wilson, who fell in action on August 26:

France, Sept. 18, 1918

Dear Friend :—It is with deep regret that I sit and write this letter to tell you about the death of your brother and my best pal, Wes.

I suppose the authorities have informed you about it but would not give you any details. It was this way—we were about to go over the top and as B company was in support. I thought Wes would be O K, but as we were about to jump off, Wes with the company commander and another scout were in the same shell-hole and a shell dropped practically in the same hole wounding all three Wes and the company commander died from the result of the wounds received.

His loss is felt by a good number of his friends, and as I might say he was one of the best scouts in the Batt, so his loss is felt by the whole company and Battalion.

He asked me to write home and let you know if anything ever happened to him. I only wish I did not have to do it, but God is merciful and when our time comes we must answer the call.

I will have to stop now as I cannot write much more. I hope this finds the the remainder of the family in the best of health I remain your sympathetic friend --A. G. A. WILSON

The FOOD CONTROLLER SAYS:-

Your job is to grub stake this world. That is what you are up against, and it is quite a job. You can do it. You have done it for four years and what was done then can be duplicated.

There is no such thing as a food surplus in this world. The universe is living from hand to mouth as probably never before in its history.

The stocks of food have been wiped out and the producers have been taken from the land in large numbers. The call to those remaining is much louder than ever before. It is more insistent, and its demands must be heeded.

The full dinner pail is but a memory for millions on this earth. It can be filled sufficiently to keep life going, but it can only be filled by you. It can't be done in Europe. It must be done here.

Get the tractors on the land. Keep them working. This can be done. You have the patriotism, the courage, and the heroism to do it.

Five head of young cattle dead, entailing a loss to their owner of $500, was the experience of John Young of Bradley, who turned a drove of nine head of cattle into a field of alfalfa, where they were grazing for just 20 minutes. The entire herd got bloated and five of them died after an unsuccessful effort of a veterinary surgeon to relieve them of the gas by punching holes in their sides.
