Durham Cement Works Liquidate

After an unprofitable existence of about eighteen years, during which the stockholders entertained hopes and fears, but latterly fears only, the cement plant passed away peacefully on Tuesday afternoon and after Saturday next the Standard Bank of Canada will take charge of the remains and dispose of them in accordance with their best judgment. Never in the history of the plant has it been a financial success. There is little doubt that much of the failure was due to inefficient management and extravagant administration of affairs. It is gone now, and every citizen regrets the loss of an institution that furnished employment to so many. It may have been an error to have ever located the plant here, at so great a distance from the raw materials needed in the production of cement. Other plants under more favorable conditions have gone the same way and in the case of the plant here it would be unfair to charge the whole failure to inefficiency and extravagance. The indebtedness to the Standard Bank is over $400,000 and a representative on Tuesday signified the bank's willingness to accept $200,000 to satisfy the claim. There is no doubt the bank has been exceedingly generous with the company during its existence and exceedingly lenient in suggesting the final settlement. The bank, we understand, has paid or will pay all indebtedness of the company and is the sole creditor. To foreclose the mortgage or claim seemed the only possible course, and notice was given accordingly.

It isn't at all likely that the plant will be turned to any other use, and may be dismantled by the bank for what they can get out of it—Chronicle.
