Who could imagine that the fashion in duck eggs could change so materially as it appears to have done this year? The color scheme appears to have altered very materially. We have heard of three different birds who appear to be leading the fashion of laying black duck eggs instead of the pretty blue tint that has been in vogue since time immemorial. They evidently think, like the U.F.O., that it is time for a change. On Monday Mr. John Adams, of the west suburbs, handed us two duck eggs—the first laid this year by one of his birds—that were decidedly black in coloring. The new color is not as pleasing to the eye as the old, but perhaps after all the birds that laid these eggs of mourning are only quack ducks.
