Chatsworth is the latest village to get in wrong with the hydro commission, and has received a notice from that body giving the discomforting information that the village owes the octopus over $1500, and that it has been going behind since the very first year of installation-1918. The notice says : "When power was first taken by Chatsworth it was impossible to determine actual cost conditions." This being the case, why does the commission go on making estimates when such estimates are useless? Why mislead the people intentionally or otherwise, causing them to make huge investments with the idea that they are getting something cheap? Actual cost is an elastic term. If a business is not economically conducted the cost mounts up so high that the result is not profitable to anybody except the army of employees and the workmen whom the public pay. Hydro has saddled costs on Flesherton which has made its use a heavy burden to bear, and which, if it were an ordinary private business proposition, would not have been borne for a moment. But it is the people's own enterprise, developed to give them electricity at cost and must not be criticized! 'Rah for Beck!

We don't know what Premier Drury wanted a brass coal scuttle in his office for. This is one of the items brought out in the public accounts probe. It looks a little extravagant. If the rest of the furnishings for the Premier's apartments are on a par with this there will have been some expenditure. Instead of cutting down his salary it would have been cheaper for the province if he had accepted the old figure, and provided his home outside the parliament buildings.
