Last Thursday morning a deer was seen struggling in the snow on the farm of Mr. John Oliver, Old Durham Road, and on making an examination it was found to have one hind leg badly broken, supposedly by falling on ice. A couple of dogs got after a deer in a swamp near town on Thursday last and chased the animal into Wm. So far as we can learn the dogs were not owned in town.

Women's Concert Another Success

Everybody in town attended the entertainment given in the high school by the ladies of the Methodist church on Thursday evening last, and since then everybody has been suffering from a kink in the side owing to the mirthfulness provoked by Mrs Jarley's wax figures. The thing was too funny for description and we won't attempt it. It requires nerve to go in for a thing like this—and muscle. Think of attempting to stand in one position for an hour or more while the exhibitor was describing each piece in detail. Try to hold your hand out for ten minutes in one position and you will understand something of the amount of grit required to go through with such a show. One lady very nearly fainted, another piece of wax work fell over and they allowed her to lie where she fell while she rested, but it all seemed natural and the audience thought it all in the evening's fun. Swollen feet and tired limbs from long standing or sitting were general. As a fun producer the piece is a scream, especially when you can get Simple Simon into the scenario. Natural as life! Other choice characters represented were: The Giggler, Long Tom the Chinaman, Uncle Tom, Little Jack Horner, Queen Elizabeth, Babes in The Woods, The Bachelor and His Bride, Jack Spratt and Wife, Mr. Jarley, etc. A play was also given called, "A rag carpet cutting bee," which was very funny. Altogether it was a great evening for laughter. The proceeds amounted to $93 40. This is an annual affair, of course with variations, and is always looked upon as one of the big events of the season.

Murder Trial Is Postponed

Owen Sound, Ont., March 8.—Because a juryman had been left unguarded a few minutes and had been spoken to by an outsider during that time, Mr Justice Logie dismissed the jury in the McMillen murder case and ordered a new trial at next Assizes. James Foster, a juryman, had registered at the Queen's Hotel, and the sheriff had made arrangements for the jury hearing the case to be put up at the Seldon House. Foster was taken to the Queen's Hotel in charge of a constable and allowed to go to his room alone to pack up. While there a Captain Barton followed him upstairs and the two were alone together for a few minutes. Foster said no conversation had taken place.

"I am not suggesting any impropriety," said the judge, "but the law says that in capital cases the jury cannot separate for the very reason they may be, consciously or unconsciously, influenced by their friends. Under these circumstances, I see nothing for it but to discharge the jury and traverse this case to the next Assize."

Turning to the jury, Justice Logie said: "Gentlemen, you are discharged. I regret that this county has been put to such expense unnecessarily. Some of you may be county councillors, and, if so, I trust you will see that in the future some provisions must be made for jurymen who are locked up over night."

The prisoners were then taken back to jail.

Justice Logie gave permission to R L Brackin, defence counsel, to apply to him for an order to change the venue to some convenient place where an Assize will be held in the near future.
