FEVERSHAM

Splendid rains are making rapid growth and we think that though the spring seems backward that the growth is as early if not earlier than usual. The leaves are coming out on the trees.

Mr. R. S. McGirr has gone on a visit with friends in the Queen city and at Weston.

Clarence Alexander has gone to Port McNicoll for the summer.

The blacksmith must be lonesome now since the Sooner Club have quit holding meetings in his shop. The members have all gone to work.

I wonder if the pheasants, bear, wild geese and groundhogs at Eugenia have caused the suckers to come up the Black Creek in greater numbers than usual, or was it that the Hydro people were afraid that visitors wonldn't know the difference and banished them!? Well, visitors needn't make that mistake, as the Hydro fellows of course wear clothes. Ask John Boland what he thinks about it.

Seeding is progressing fine. Some fields of oats are coming through the ground.

Do you know that we believe some of the young men are going to take our advice about that other kind of license. We thought we saw Harvey and Jack smile and nod their heads when they read the item.

Harold Spofford is recovering nicely from his severe illness,

Mrs Geo Julian is feeling some better. We hope to soon see her able to get out again after being in very bad health for some time.

Say, we think the school board put that high wire fence on the west side of the school in the wrong place. But when we come to think of it, it wouldn't be high or strong enough to hold Clive if put where we had thought of.

Some nice catches of speckled beauties are being got by the fishermen if what we hear is true, but then you know these kind of stories always are fishy.

Dr. Peterson of Dundalk has sold his dental practice to Dr. Marshall of Toronto.

A fatal accident took place at Campania Mulmur township, the little four year old son of Mr. and Mrs. William Walker being the victim. The unfortunate little fellow was in the field where his father was ploughing, and seeing another plow went over to play with it. A little later the father found the boy lying on the ground dead beneath the plow with the beam of the implement across his neck.

Telephone Visiting

Quite a number of persons in Walkerton and vicinity are reported to be doing their visiting on the telephone, and sometimes a weary business man, trying to secure a connection on an important matter, is constrained to believe that such is either the case or else that a number of individuals have very little else to do but harp on the telephone, Telephonitis is often a desease of the unoccupied and lazy. The person who is too slothful to make a visit, business or social, is still able to drag the telephone instrument to his or her elbow, to engage a victim's ear and to pour forth all the trivial gossip and the banal inquiries that kill time and friendship. Of course, politeness is needed in telephone conversations The tone of the voice, the form of address, should be as discriminating as if a yard and not a single mile separated the talkers. But it is necessary to remember that the person at the other end of the wire may have been interrupted by the bell in the midst of most important business. A system of telephonitis is that it recognizes no rights in others. The person who has it does not consider that he or she may be breaking in on a man who is trying to complete a sale or a woman engaged upon the multifarious duties of a household. The telephone fiends want to telephone to somebody and that somebody must take the consequences or be accused of rudeness. Those who have telephonitis believe that, by calling up a dozen persons and chattering with them on every subject from the weather to the latest "movie," they have accomplished a morning's work. The persons called up may be interested in these topics, but not in their discussion at that particular time. As to this point, the telephone fiend has neither knowledge nor consideration. It is enough for the fiend that the telephone is cheap and quick way of trapping a victim. The only escape from one of these misusers of the telephone lies in cold and somewhat brutal treatment of the guilty. How to apply this must suggest itself to each sufferer according to the circumstances and his knowledge of the offender.

On a charge of theft of a horse blanket from the horse sheds in Dundalk, W. Maxwell, Jr. and Albert Young, of Melancthon, were up before Police Magistrate Mark Aamstrong, of Markdale, at the town hall in Dundalk on Saturday. The Magistrate considered both equally guilty on the evidence but viewed the matter leniently as a first offence and let them off on suspended sentence, taking their personal bond for good behaviour for one year. The young men paid the costs of the court which amounted to about $30.—Dundalk Herald.

How Hepworth Was Named

In the early days of the settlement there was a great Methodist revival. When the service was over it was decided to erect a church. An English settler, with a decided Cockney accent, who was one of the converts, gave very generously in the erection of the new building. It was decided to recognize his liberality in the cause by giving him the right to name the church. This was something new to the Englishman and he asked for advice. It was suggested that as Epworth was the name of the parish where John Wesley's father was rector, it would be fitting to call the new church Epworth. The Englishman was delighted. "Hepworth it will be," he declared. The settlers, somewhat as a joke, decided to retain the Cockney's "h" and the church, and later the village which sprung up around it, was called Hepworth, and Hepworth it is today—London Free Press.

Death of Mrs. Currie

The remains of Mrs. Laughlan Currie, who died in Chicago last week, reached here on Saturday and interment took place in the Union cemetery on Sunday afternoon when the services were conducted by Rev. J. A. Lang, pastor of the Presbyterian church. Mrs. Currie, who was in her seventy fourth year, was before her marriage Miss Buie. Her husband died some years ago and the parents are survived by a large family scattered over the country. One son, Archibald, resides north of Singhampton on the Bateman sideroad and it was from his home the funeral was conducted on Sunday. Many of the old friends of the family were present to pay their last tribute of respect.—Stayner Sun.

After the work of the forenoon lunch was provided by the parents, quite a number of whom were present, and all enjoyed a picnic with the children. After the picnic the teacher gave the children the usual half holiday.
