TOYS OF A STORM

An Experience on a Mountain Top Alive With Electricity.

MEN GLOWED WITH SPARKS.

The Discharge From the Lightning Laden Cloud Enveloped the Party and Turned It Into a Sort of Human Pyrotechnic Display.

We had spent a week in pathless and dense woods, working toward a high mountain in northwestern Montana. At last we left the pack horses in care of the guide, and three of us set out on foot for the peak. We carried a plate camera, provisions, an ice pick, a compass, a hatchet for detaining specimens and other necessary articles. For several hours we climbed over ridges and up ravines.

The final ascent was a slope of rotten shale. For one and a half hours we climbed the loose rock, with not a solid bit of footing. Halfway up the slope we observed that a storm cloud had gathered southwest of us, not far above a ridge which we had crossed early in the morning. Suddenly a bolt of lightning flashed from the cloud to the earth. A little later a wreath of smoke ascended from the ridge, and we knew a fire had started from the lightning.

About half past 1 we reached the summit, a narrow top but a few feet in width, on which was a pile of rocks shoulder high, a government triangulation monument. Before was a precipice, at the foot of which was an untrodden and unexplored glacier. Behind was the rotten shale up which we had scrambled. To the right a narrow ridge, with bowlders as large as a small house, connected our summit with the one beyond.

Against the eastern face of this summit great masses of snow and ice formed the head of the glacier. To the left was a steep, open ridge.

The glacier was furrowed by hundreds of chasms. The yellow rocks of the neighboring summits were flanked by great masses of ice on the one side and by tremendous precipices on the other. Far away the mountains blended with the blue sky. On the crags were a few mountain goats.

"What is that noise?" shouted one of the boys suddenly.

"What noise? I do not hear it," I replied.

"Over at the monument."

"I will go and see."

The monument was not a dozen steps away. As I approached it I smelled the pungent odor of ozone, and instantly I knew. We had forgotten the storm cloud gathering near us to the south. The summit on which we stood presented to the electric cloud above a sharper point in comparison with the earth than can be made on any electric machine. The exchange of electricity between the charged cloud and the earth began at the rock monument, which was a little higher than the place where we stood. I may have heard the noise; I do not remember. I smelled the ozone and turned toward my companions with the cry: "We are in an electric storm! We must run for our lives!"

In a few seconds the electric discharge had increased with wonderful rapidity. My rifle was shooting sparks from the end of the barrel, which were visible in broad daylight. I did not drop the gun; I threw it. My scalp felt as if each hair was a bristle on end pushing against my hat. I could feel the discharge from fingers, cheeks, nose and chin, and I was wearing heavy rubber soled shoes, which should have assisted in making me a nonconductor.

One of my companions threw away his ice pick, as I had thrown my gun. The other, seeing my white face—as he afterward told me—was completely unnerved and knew not what he was doing or what to do. Before was the cliff. Behind was the rock shale, with no protection. To the right was the impassable ridge, connecting the summits and blocked with masses of rock. There was only one way—to the left.

"Shall we go this way," said one, extending his hand in that direction. The extended hand and fingers were aglow with sparks shooting outward from the body, and instantly the arm was jerked back to the body with a startled exclamation. Stronger and stronger grew the charge. It seemed to fill our bodies and crackled from every projecting rock.

Half dazed, I hooked my arm in the carrying case of my camera and with it dashed down the ridge, followed closely by my two companions. We crawled under a big rock and, with our feet against the ice and our backs against the solid mountain, felt safe. Thus we remained for perhaps an hour. Then we began to feel hungry and in this trying position ate our luncheon.

We returned to the summit. Fortunately the cloud had passed to the south of us, and we had experienced only the edge of the manifestation of electricity. Had the cloud been directly overhead this story would perhaps never have been written.—Morton J. Elrod in Youth's Companion.

Reasoning It Out.

"I have calculated that I can't lose much if I put my money in electrical illumination."

"Why not?"

"Because there couldn't possibly be a heavy loss on a light investment."—Baltimore American.

Concrete-mixing is Easily Learned

It is no more difficult than mixing bran mash, once the simple instructions have been read.

The materials—sand, crushed rock or gravel and cement—each play a separate part. The rock provides the bulk of volume at very low cost. The sand sifts in all crevices between the pieces of rock or gravel. The cement, mixed with water, forms a "bond," in other words a rocky "glue," that binds the other materials firmly together with a strength that increases with time. Concrete is really artificial rock, more firmly bound together than natural rock, which often has cracks, veins, fissures and other weaknesses.

Any farmer can learn how to mix Concrete and to apply it to the hundreds of uses to which it is fitted.

But in order to be absolutely sure that his proportions are correct and that his materials are properly suited to the purpose, he should send for the book.

"WHAT THE FARMER CAN DO WITH CONCRETE," and read the careful directions for mixing Concrete for all purposes. It also describes in detail hundreds of ways in which Concrete may be used to make the farm more comfortable, more convenient, more profitable and more valuable.

Just send us your name and address—is a letter or on a postal—and the book will be sent to you by return mail free.

THE PAPAL GUARDS.

The Most Unique and Striking Army in the World.

The most singular and striking body of trained soldiers serving under any potentate is that which garrisons the Pope's palace in Rome. From the silver-casqued Noble Guards, the Swiss Halberdiers in doublet and ruff, down to the Palatine Guards in shako and the Pontifical Gendarmes in bearskin, they form a distinctive feature of the papal court and a befitting setting to a mediæval picture. Their gorgeous or quaint uniforms, glancing helmets, flashing arms, glittering breastplates — like the black velvet doublets, ruffs and rapiers of the gentleman-in-waiting—are in perfect artistic harmony with their surroundings, from which they receive and on which they bestow that picturesque finish of the Vatican, although the presence of these troopers and foreign mercenaries, morally speaking, is an abnomaly and an anachronism.

This singular little army of a spiritual potentate consists of noble Roman volunteers, burghar civic guards and Italian or foreign mercenaries, and comprises four companies, differently armed, uniformed and officered, and each possessing a distinct history of its own and a separate organization.

First in dignity and antiquity come the Noble Guards, in their scarlet tunics, golden epaulets and silver helmets. Raised in 1485 under the name of Light Horsemen, they were formed into two squadrons; and many years later, in 1565, their strength was increased by the addition of 100 freelances, chosen exclusively from the scion of noble houses who could show a sufficient number of quarterings. The two corps were reorganized and united into one by Pope Pius VII. in 1801, when, after the stress and storm of the great French revolution, he had righted the ship of St. Peter. These noble guardsmen mount guard in the ante-chamber of his holiness' private apartment, and escort the Pope when he drives out. They now number 60 all told, under the command of a lieutenant-general.

The Swiss Guards, who rank next in precedence, were first enrolled by the fighting Pope Julius II., and subsequently, during the 17th and 18th centuries, three companies were added to the original one. After many vicissitudes, they were finally reduced to one company, which musters 122 men of all ranks, commanded by a captain ranking as colonel. The other two corps of household troops—namely the Palatine or Palace Guards and Pontifical Gendarmes—are far more modern, and do not possess the same stirring traditions. They are chiefly employed in church ceremonies, conjointly with the gendarmes, to maintain order among the crowds who throng St. Peter's on such occasions; and they are called out about once a month to drill or to mount guard. They number 170 men of all ranks, and are all volunteers, providing their own uniform and receiving a small annual allowance for incidental expenses.

The Pontificial Gendarmes—though last in precedence, by no means the least in appearance of the four pontificial corps—were raised in 1816 to replace the French military police instituted by Napoleon I., and, like the Irish military constabulary, were charged with the protection of persons and property throughout the whole papal states. Reduced in numbers and duties, they now muster but 96 men and officers, and perform police duties within the Vatican at state ceremonies, as on the occasion of the present Pope's jubilee, and act in conjunction with the Palatine Guards in keeping order within St. Peter's.

Finger Arithmetic.

The earliest way of counting was by means of the fingers, and in the picture writing of the ancients the drawing of an open hand invariably signified the numeral V. Some nations, indeed, even went so far as to make their week consist of five days. A few tribes were not content to count solely by the fingers alone and added their toes as well. The Aztecs, for example, counted in multiples of twenty and had twenty days in their months. The Roman notation consisted of a ten fingered system, and the X used to signify ten is, after all, only two V's, placed point to point or apex to apex, the V typifying five.

Mamma's Definition.

The family was grouped around the library table when the little son looked up from his book and asked:

"Papa, what is an egotist?"

"An egotist," the father answered, "is a man who thinks he is cleverer than any one else."

But the mother, laughing coldly, appended:

"No, my son, that is not quite right. An egotist is a man who says he is cleverer than any one else — every man thinks he is."

Pure Milk Law.

England's pure food law requires that every can of condensed milk must contain a label visible to the purchaser on which are the words "Machine skimmed milk" or "Skimmed milk." Dr. J. F. Coutles now suggests to the British Local Government that cans of condensed skimmed milk should be labeled, "Skimmed milk; unfit for infants." He has made a special study of the subject.

Cats In Ancient Egypt.

The ancient Egyptians treated cats with great distinction. It was a crime to kill them, and when they died they received a public burial, at which the people mourned, having first shaved off their eyebrows as a token of sorrow. The most prominent cats were upon death embalmed in drugs and spices, and cat mummies have been found side by side with those of kings.

His Hat Joke.

After greeting in the street the other day one of two friends, who was supposed to be a wit, said to the other:

"Say, old man, have you heard about the young lady who poured a jug of water into a straw hat?"

"No," replied his friend.

"Neither have I," said the wit as he walked away, "it hasn't leaked out yet."—London Tit-Bits.

THAT AWFUL BACKACHE

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Morton's Gap, Kentucky.—I suffered two years with female disorders, my health was very bad and I had a continual backache which was simply awful. I could not stand on my feet long enough to cook a meal's victuals without my back nearly killing me, and I would have such dragging sensations I could hardly bear it. I had soreness in each side, could not stand tight clothing, and was irregular. I was completely run down. On advice I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills and am enjoying good health. It is now more than two years and I have not had an ache or pain since. I do all my own work, washing and everything, and never have the backache any more. I think your medicine is grand and I praise it to all my neighbors. If you think my testimony will help others you may publish it.—Mrs. OLLIE WOODALL, Morton's Gap, Kentucky.

Backache is a symptom of organic weakness or derangement. If you have backache don't neglect it. To get permanent relief you must reach the root of the trouble. Nothing we know of will do this so surely as Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound.

Write to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., for special advice. Your letter will be absolutely confidential, and the advice free.
