Everything In Season

The following is copied from Steele's Western Almanac, published in Buffalo in the year 1833. The joke itself is old enough to grow whiskers:

"It is worthy of remark that when cold weather approaches and other vegetables begin to fade, whiskers sprout up and flourish with the utmost vigor. Many a face which, in summer, appears barren as the deserts of Arabia, in winter is in most luxuriant crop. Everything in its proper season—cowslips in spring, cucumbers in summer, cantelopes in autumn and whiskers in winter."

Unusual interest has been shown here this election, reminding one of days gone by, and although the U F O carried away the majority here, the old partyism appears to be revived in the hearts of many, by the showing of votes polled by the Conservatives.
